All three commissioners were a unit in declaring they had no intention of making the repairs demanded and that they would face the alternative with fortitude.

service from United States department of agriculture to the interior department. A bill providing for the transfer is pending in congress. The wool growers assert that the forest service is more efficient and meets the requirements of the western farmers and stockmen better than the bureau of the interior department now operating in the Klamath valley; that the interior bureau fails to respond to the needs of the communities; and that it would be detrimental to the western farmers and stockmen if the efficiency of the forest service were to be impaired by transfer to another department.
