BY L. H. GREGORY.
It took the Beavers two hours and 25 minutes and required the services of two left-handers to down those pesky Oaks yesterday, but they finally did it. The final score was 5 to 3 for Portland, and the Oaks were threatening to break it up right to the last man out.

Lefty Leverenz opened for the Beavers against Hod Eller, the late shine-ball king of Cincinnati 1919 world series fame. Lefty had it all his own way for five innings, while his teammates were slugging the tar out of everything Eller seemed able to pitch. They piled up a five-run lead in the first three sessions on seven hits, some of them lusty ones, and it looked as if the day would wind up in a slaughter-house procession with the heads of the Oaklanders leading the parade on pike poles.

But after the third Eller became as tight as a Grays Harbor clam. Those five runs still looked good, though, until the boys from the north started to cluster their blows off Leverenz in the sixth and seventh. They nicked him for a pair of hits in the sixth for one tally and peeled off two runs and four more hits in the seventh, whereupon the home guard began to squirm with anguish in their grandstand chairs and pray for help.

Crumpler Hastens to Crag.
Then in the eighth Brubaker, the first Oak up, reached first on a bobbie by McCann. McCann then promptly smoked single to left, but two on and none out, and the Portland band of strategy which is running under Judge Landis' displeasure decided it was high time for a change. So Soldier Boy Crumpler hastened to the crag to stop the bombardment.

Crumpler, old boy, earned his rations for the next three weeks on the first play. Brubaker hit out for third, but Elliott's peg to Connolly turned him back. He legged it back toward second while McCann and Connolly threw the ball back and forth over his head. Brubaker finally decided that third was his base after all, and dashed for it, but the McCann brothers had things all figured out and was there waiting for him with the ball. Koehler reached second on the play.

That made one out and Koehler on second. Howard bounced one to Crumpler, who was again the hero of the day. He shot it to third and Connolly and McCann ran down Koehler. Howard made second while they were doing it.

Cathers Pinch Hitter
Up came Ted Caters as pinch hitter for Eller. All Crumpler did to him was to strike him on the head, letting him get his bat off his shoulder. The final pitch was a fat slow ball which almost sang a song while it was floating to the plate. Caters watched it and solemnly heard Lord Byron call him out.

More excitement was in the ninth, with Crumpler again emerging at the laurel-wreathed kiddo. Cooper opened by walking, but Willie forced him at second. Sargent to McCann. Brown smote a hot single to right, and with the tying run on the sack it looked dark again. Lafayette socked a hard grounder to Sargent, who fielded prettily to first as the runners advanced to third and second. Mariott was up to do or die. He died about as miserably as one can in a pinch—Crumpler kidded him along until the count was three and two and not a heart in the catcher's mitt was functioning, and then crossed him by hooking over a beaut of a curve as the third strike. Mariott was amazed he didn't even swing.

Hay-Making Done Early.
The Beavers did their hay-making early. They started with two runs in the first when Cox drew a walk and stole second. McCann started for third on High's pass to Lafayette. However, Jim Thorpe came through with a smash at Lafayette so hot that gentlemen couldn't handle it. Sargent obliged by fumbling Hay's easy bouncer. With the sacks cracking, Jimmy Poole scored two with a roaring single to right. He was caught stretching, but the two runs were in.

Another tallied in the second when Elliott doubled, was sacrificed to third by McCann, and walked in on Leverenz' single to left.
They made their final two runs in the third, one of them on a double steal. With one down, Poole doubled to left and scored from second on Sargent's hit to left on which Don Brown didn't seem to know where to throw the ball. He had it when Poole touched third but evidently didn't expect him to try for the plate. Jimmy kept on going and when Brown finally threw he didn't have a chance to catch him. A moment later with Sargent on third and McCann on first, McCann started for second with the ball in Eller's hand. Eller threw to Howard, who drove him back toward first, and then pegged just a little to one side trying to catch Sargent at the plate. Sargent was safe and McCann went on and was safe at second, too. Pretty base running.

It will be Sutherland or Freeman today against Krause for the Oaks. Yesterday's score:
