

DUBLIN AND BELFAST REPORTED IN BREAK

Rupture of London Agreement Is Threatened.

JOINT RAIL INQUIRY FAILS

Provisional Head Declares Clause Providing for Investigation of Outrages Is Violated.

BELFAST, April 26.—(By the Associated Press.)—A breach between the Dublin and Belfast governments, which Ulster political quarters declare may also entail a rupture of the London agreement, is indicated by a statement issued by the provisional government in Dublin this afternoon, announcing that it is unable to cooperate with the Belfast government in an inquiry into the Irish railways.

The seriousness of the general situation between the two governments is indicated by a telegram from Michael Collins, head of the provisional government, to Sir James Craig, the Ulster premier. "All here are agreed it is impossible to make any further progress until the vital clauses of the London agreement are fulfilled by you," said Collins' telegram dated April 22. "They consider your attitude as most unsatisfactory and entirely out of accord with the letter and spirit of the agreement and your failure to agree to investigation of cases under clause V is most unreasonable." (Clause V of the London agreement of March 20 provided for establishment of a committee in Belfast with equal numbers of Catholics and Protestants, to hear and investigate complaints of intimidation, outrages, etc.)

Co-operation Held Uscles.
The statement issued in Dublin by the provisional government today reads: "It was originally intended that the commission of inquiry into the Irish railways should be joint, as between the provisional government and the Belfast parliament, but owing to the state of affairs in Belfast and the failure of the Belfast parliament to carry out its agreement and undertaking, the provisional government has decided it is quite useless to endeavor to act in co-operation with it."

Consequently, the commission of inquiry into the railways has been directed to open its public proceedings in Dublin Tuesday next. Sir James Craig's reply to Michael Collins' telegram of April 22, made public today, asserts that there had been no co-operation on the part of the provisional government, which had not even appointed its nominees on the advisory committee called by the London agreement.

Boycott Not Withdrawn.
The Ulster premier also complained that the provisional government had not withdrawn the boycott of Ulster and that hundreds of thousands of pounds' worth of Belfast goods had been destroyed in southern Ireland. He declared the Irish republican army still will continue its operations in Ulster and he asserted in general that there had been bad faith on the part of the provisional government.

The London agreement alluded to is the one reached at the conference of March 20, participated in by British cabinet members, Michael Collins and Arthur Griffith, for south Ireland, and Sir James Craig and the Marquis of Londonderry for northern Ireland. By this agreement, the two Irish governments undertook to cooperate with a view to the restoration of peaceful conditions in the unsettled areas in Ireland. The agreement included the institution of new legal methods to settle differences between the Catholic and Protestant interests in Ulster, the cessation of Irish republican army activities in the northern counties and other conciliatory measures. A Belfast dispatch Tuesday night reported serious differences between the two governments over the appointment of a joint commission for Irish railway affairs, the provisional government having nominated its men independently of the northern government. It was stated that work had been received from Labor Minister McGrath of the southern cabinet that it could not agree to the joint commission plan in view of unsatisfactory replies from Ulster to communications regarding the London pact, indicating in the view of the southern authorities that Ulster did not intend to honor the agreement.

declaring she was beating her way to New York, where she expected to find more journalistic atmosphere, a 20-year-old University of Missouri co-ed, detained here by the police today, said she was the daughter of Dr. Ben Reitman, writer and sociological worker for the Chicago health department. The girl first gave her name as Helen Reit.

"If the faculty ever hears of this, I'm a goner," she said. The girl was taken into custody last night by Special Patrolman Manning, when he suspected that a girl was masked by the khaki outfit. With her was Walter Coville of Chicago, a cousin, who was attempting to disguise the girl from continuing her hobo trip, he said.

Helen frankly admitted giving a wrong name, but the rest of her story she told freely. She said she was a junior in the journalism school at Missouri, that she wanted to get to New York, and, lacking funds, decided to beat her way.

The county commissioners then agreed to pay her way.

PABCOLIN QUALITY—durability and wear and tear resistance—has been proved beyond the shadow of a doubt by four grueling tests. On Fifth Avenue, New York, in Los Angeles and twice in Portland (at Broadway and Washington and at Fifth and Alder Sts., March 20, 1922), strips of regular stock Pabcolin were placed in the street, allowed to remain there all day under the traffic.

TRAFFIC TESTED—Automobiles, trucks and heavy horse-drawn vehicles passed over these pieces throughout the days of the tests. In New York it rained hard! In Los Angeles the sun was hot; in Portland, you know how it rained during March. All tests were highly successful. In each test after the day's trial in the street the Pabcolin pieces were taken up, washed with cold water and the condition of the pieces observed. One cut in the New York test, caused by the knife-edge of a broken skid chain, three small holes caused by horse' hoofs striking the pieces directly over small holes in the pavement in Portland—these were the only cuts, cracks, stains or blemishes found. Every piece was in perfect condition, ready to give a lifetime of service in any home.
