BAR ASKS OUSTING OF AIDE TO SPY

Action Against Woerndle Filed at Salem.

LAWYER'S AIR DEFIANT

"I'd Do Same Thing Again," Says Naturalized German. Hearing Held in Portland.

"I'm not ashamed of what I did and would do the same thing again."

In these words, Joseph Woerndle, one-time Austrian consular agent at Portland and valuable aide to the German spy, Hans Boehm, during the activities of the latter in the United States and Europe during the world war, hurled defiance at the members of a joint committee of the Oregon state and Multnomah county bar associations which had cited him to answer to charges of unprofessional conduct.

This happened in the law offices of Bradley Ewers, prosecutor for the county bar association, last Thursday night, but details of the meeting did not seep out until late yesterday when accusations in a disbarment proceeding against Woerndle, initiated by the legal fraternity, were filed in the supreme court at Salem. Rumors of the hearing were rife in legal circles for several days, but confirmation did not come until yesterday.

Woerndle Cited to Appear.

The bar associations were represented by their grievance committees at the hearing, the Oregon state organization's committee chairman being A. L. Veazie and prosecutor Elton Watkins, the county association's chairman, Hugh Montgomery, and prosecutor, Bradley Ewers.

Woerndle was cited to appear to answer charges of unprofessional conduct, including conspiracy to violate statutes of the United States by allowing a non-citizen to use his passport and perjury in making an affidavit claiming the loss of a passport issued in October, 1914, and turned over to Boehm.

Passage of time had outlawed both these accusations before there was possibility of federal prosecution and the recent hearing in the federal court was only an attempt to revoke the citizenship papers of Woerndle on the ground that when he swore allegiance to the United States it was with a mental reservation in favor of his "vaterland."

Charges Virtually Admitted.

Though safe from prosecution in the courts of this country because of the lapse of years, Woerndle's acts were not outlawed in the eyes of the bar associations of the state and the disbarment petition was the outcome.

Confronted with the evidence of the bar associations, Woerndle admitted virtually all the facts charged, but said he did not feel he had done anything wrong or committed any crime.

"I believe that I owed something to my old father in Germany and to the country in which I was born and which gave me my education," protested the lawyer.

He followed this with the declaration that he would do the same thing over again if opportunity warranted. A wave of excitement swept over the committeemen at the hearing and several sprang to their feet with angry denunciations and shouts of "Do you mean that?" Woerndle stubbornly replied, "Sure, I do." No personal violence was offered Woerndle by those present but indignation was at a high pitch when he was dismissed from the hearing.

Woerndle Born in Germany.

Members of the state association grievance committee present at the hearing were: A. L. Veazie, Alfred P. Dobson, Alfred A. Hampson, J. O. Bailey and John W. Renolds. Of the county association, Hugh Montgomery, Albert B. Ridgway, Robert F. Maguire, Homer D. Angell and John K. Kollock were present. B. E. Haney, member of the county grievance committee, was the only one of the personnel out of the city.

Woerndle was born in Germany in 1880 and came to America at the age of 17 years. He was admitted to citizenship in Pacific county, Washington, on August 23, 1904.

The accusation filed with A. S. Benson, clerk of the state supreme court, yesterday set out that Woerndle applied to the state department for a passport on October 3, 1914, and received one on October 9, 1914. The passport was to be delivered to Woerndle at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel, New York city. It was there obtained by Hans W. Boehm, German spy, in the name of Joseph Woerndle.

Passport Is Used by Spy.

Boehm, who was an officer in the German army, used the passport to travel in safety from New York to Berlin. On October 3, 1914, Woerndle delivered to Boehm the patent issued to Woerndle for lands in California for the purpose of enabling Boehm to pose as Woerndle.

Still using the passport, Boehm returned to the United States at an unknown date, but not later than January 3, 1915, at which time the German chancellor, Zimmerman, cabled the German ambassador at Washington, D. C., as follows:

"General staff desires energetic action in regard to proposed construction of Canadian Pacific railway at several points with a view to complete and protracted interruption of traffic. Captain Boehm, who is known on your side, has been given instructions. Inform the military attache and provide the necessary funds."

$50,000 Given to Boehm.

Shortly after this cablegram was received, one von Papen delivered to Boehm the sum of $50,000 "for special purposes," said sum being deposited with the Guaranty Trust company of New York under the name of "Woerndle & Hansen," against which Woerndle was authorized to draw.

Thereafter, Boehm traveled in safety in various European countries then at war with Germany under passports obtained by use of the name of Woerndle. Woerndle is accused in this in conspiring to perpetrate fraud upon the government of the United States in obtaining its protection to one not a citizen.

Perjury was committed, allege the bar associations, when Woerndle in April, 1920, applied for a passport for himself and declared under oath that "My last passport was obtained from the secretary of state in October, 1914, and was lost or stolen (journey not made)."

Joseph Woerndle, attorney and ex-Austrian consul at Portland, against whom disbarment proceedings have been filed in supreme court.

WRECK IS BLAMED ON MIXED SIGNALS

River Pilots Testify on Collision in Columbia.

TWO VERSIONS HEARD

In All Important Essentials, Members of Crew of Each Support Respective Pilots.

Testimony yesterday at the trial of Edward Sullivan and A. R. Pearson, pilots, was taken to indicate the wreck of the British steamer Welsh Prince, through collision with the American steamer Iowan near Altoona, Wash., a week ago Sunday night, was traceable to a mixup in passing signals. Seven lives were lost aboard the Welsh Prince and three of the crew injured.

Pilot Sullivan, who was aboard the Welsh Prince, bound from Portland for sea, heavily laden with lumber and steel for oriental ports, testified the Iowan gave two whistles, which he answered promptly. Pilot Pearson, handling the Iowan, heading upstream partly loaded, testified he gave only one whistle, to which he said he did not hear an answer. As the steamers neared each other, Pilot Pearson said he signaled again with a single blast, which was answered by the Welsh Prince with a danger signal. The Iowan answered the danger signal, he insisted. Engines of both ships were put full speed astern at that juncture.

Crews Agree With Pilots.

The proceedings were heard before Captain E. S. Edwards, inspector of hulls for the Oregon district, and John E. Wynn, inspector of boilers, sitting as the local board for the United States steam vessel inspection service. Erskine Wood appeared as counsel for Pilot Pearson and owners of the Iowan, with W. H. Hayden of Seattle as attorney for Pilot Sullivan and representing Furness, Withey & Co., the owners of the Welsh Prince, while Wallace McCamant was legal representative for Portland shippers of cargo aboard the sunken steamer.

In virtually every particular, especially as to essential details of testimony, the officers and members of the crew of each vessel were arrayed with their respective pilots.

Ships 3500 Feet Apart.

Pilot Sullivan testified the ships were about 3500 feet apart when he heard the first two whistles and that the Welsh Prince was making 11 miles an hour. He said that when he gave the danger signal he heard no danger signal from the Iowan. Both admitted having failed later to give three whistles to indicate their engines were going astern.

Captain Hugh H. Hill, master of the Welsh Prince, and W. H. Hammond, third officer, who were on the bridge, also Robert Blakey, apprentice, who was on lookout on the forecastle head, corroborated Pilot Sullivan's testimony.

A question as to the steering gear of the Welsh Prince being out of order, as reported, was answered by testimony that it worked as usual from the time of leaving Portland until the ships struck.

Iowan Drawing 24 Feet.

Pilot Pearson said the Iowan was drawing less than 14 feet forward and 24 feet aft and that he sighted the Welsh Prince when the ships were about a mile and a quarter or a mile and a half apart and that he gave one whistle. He said he heard no response to his whistle signal and after proceeding about half a mile, repeated it and that the other ship then swung and he could see her other light, whereupon he sounded several short blasts on the whistle and ordered full speed astern with the helm hardaport.

On cross examination he denied having given two whistles in the first instance and said that while he was certain his signal had been heard, he repeated it as he had a doubt whether it had been answered; also that he did not see both the red and green running lights of the approaching ship until she swung across his bow.

Captain LaVerge Testifies.

Captain Louis LaVerge, master of the Iowan, testified he came on deck a short time before the collision; that he plainly saw the approaching steamer's red light and heard Pilot Pearson ask the mate which of two whistles on the Iowan was the loudest and on being answered gave one blast on the starboard whistle; that later, perhaps in two minutes, the signal was repeated and then the Welsh Prince answered with a danger signal, though he said he did not hear two whistles following the danger whistles.

Vernon Crane, third officer of the Iowan, said there was an interval of possibly two minutes between the one whistle signal given by the Iowan and that the ship answered the danger signal of the Welsh Prince. E. C. Harper, third assistant engineer, who was on watch, testified to receiving a stopping bell at 10:48 o'clock, then an order for full speed astern.

Quartermaster Jelson of the Iowan, who was at the wheel, said he had heard one single whistle and that was followed shortly by the danger signal. The testimony of a sailor aboard the Iowan and the introduction of a rough engine room log or record is to be offered today, though the case was virtually closed yesterday.

The inspectors announced they would consider the cases of both pilots on the testimony offered, not making separate trials of the charges, which are of misconduct.

TERMINAL USE IS URGED

PORTLAND LUMBERMAN INDORSES PROJECT.

New York Undertaking Is Regarded as of Great Benefit to Pacific Northwest.

Assurances were given Portland bankers and lumbermen yesterday by Ernest R. Shaw, general manager of the Fulton Lumber Terminal company of New York, that a big new project being built at the metropolis will offer the utmost facility for the marketing of northwest lumber and timber products and he asked that producers of the northwest use the big new terminal that is now being provided for them. He was told by Portland leaders in the lumber industry that they are eager to take advantage of his company's project.

Mr. Shaw was guest of honor at a luncheon yesterday arranged by the state chamber of commerce and he met about 20 bankers and lumbermen who were interested in his proposition.

In 60 days, it was said, the new terminal will offer open storage for lumber on its first unit of 66 acres and in six months facilities will be afforded for handling lumber in bulk.

F. C. Knapp, president of the Peninsula Lumber company, indorsed the project and said he regarded it as a great benefit to the lumbermen of the Pacific northwest.

H. L. Hudson, traffic manager for the Port of Portland and the dock commission, said he has gone over the property where the terminal is now being built and he expressed the opinion that from the traffic point of view it will serve the distribution problem for the northwest in the New York territory.

William Hanley, president of the state chamber of commerce, presided at yesterday's luncheon.

MOONSHINE PLANT TAKEN

OPERATORS ESCAPE, STILL IS NOT FOUND.

Mash, Pressure Tanks and Furnace Are Captured by Deputy Sheriff Beeman.

Eight barrels of whisky mash, furnace, pressure tanks and tools, but no still, were found in a secluded spot 12 miles up the Columbia river from Vancouver, Wash., on Government island, yesterday. The mash would not have been ready for distilling until Wednesday, by which time the rapidly rising river would have flooded the place, a contingency against which no precautions had been taken.

The moonshiners were not discovered, but it was believed that they were Parkrose residents who negotiated the river channel to reach their hidden headquarters. The mash was dumped into the river, barrels smashed, and a note left, reading, "Call the sheriff's office, Portland, if you wish to claim any property lost."

To reach the place, Deputy Sheriff Beeman went to Vancouver, from there to Fisher, Wash., and took a boat to Government island, circling it twice before finally sighting the mash and paraphernalia.

Club Makes Expenditure.

SALEM, Or., June 6.—(Special.)—It was the "Olcott for Governor club," and not George E. Waters, that spent $1847.54 in behalf of Mr. Olcott during the campaign preceding the primaries, according to a statement issued by the club this afternoon. The misleading statement, which was published yesterday, it was said, was issued as a result of misinformation. In the previous statement it was explained that Mr. Olcott spent nothing in his own behalf.

R. A. THOMPSON IS SUED

INJUNCTION TO PREVENT OPENING BUSINESS ASKED

Company Declares Contract Provides Against Competition for 20-Year Period.

An injunction to prevent R. A. Thompson, optician, from re-entering business in Portland is sought in a suit filed in the circuit court yesterday by the Thompson Optical Institute, founded and lated sold by the man sued.

Under the contract of sale entered into on January 30, 1917, Dr. Thompson agreed not to engage in any similar business in Oregon for a period of 20 years, it is claimed by the plaintiff in the action, who also asserts that the contract contains a clause in which Dr. Thompson promised "to use his best endeavors to promote and increase the prosperity of said business."

Dr. Thompson returned to Portland recently, opening an optical establishment, it is charged, and advertising that he is in no wise affiliated or connected with the plaintiff institute.

The injunction asked is based on an alleged violation of contract. Hearing is set for next Tuesday.

Charles A. Rusco and E. B. Wheat were the purchasers of the business of the optical institute from Dr. Thompson in 1917.

Dr. Thompson, who has not yet filed his answer to the charges in court, said last night that he had understood the contract would terminate in five years instead of 20 years and that this was the basis on which he had agreed to sell out. He asserted that it was his intention to initiate optical stores in a chain system along the Pacific coast and desired to locate first in Portland.

The man who puts the bubbles in it

You have perhaps noticed the silvery bubbles in Clicquot Club Ginger Ale and that they stay in it a long time.

"Putting in the bubbles" is an important part of making Clicquot. The spring water, drawn from the bed-rock through aluminum pipes, is quite cold but not cold enough.

By refrigeration, the temperature of the water is forced down almost to freezing. Then the water is carbonated. That's what makes Clicquot so lively, so full of sparkle.

Warmer water would not take the carbonation so well, nor would it hold it so long after the bottle is opened. So the man who puts the bubbles in Clicquot watches the thermometers and keeps the temperature just right.

And every part of the making of Clicquot Club is just as carefully guarded. No ginger but real Jamaica ginger is used, only pure cane sugar sweetens it, and the happy blend of Clicquot is made with the addition of fruit juices. No wonder they all like it.

Order Clicquot Club Ginger Ale by the case. Should you desire a change in flavors at times, you can get a mixed case with Ginger Ale, Sarsaparilla, Birch Beer, and Root Beer.
