

DITCHING OF BONUS BILL HELD ASSURED

Passage of Measure by Senate Is Expected.

VETO COUNTED CERTAIN

Discussion Turns on Form President's Disapproval Will Take; Three Courses Possible.

BY MARK SULLIVAN (Copyright by the New York Evening Post. Published by Arrangement.) WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 28.—(Special.)—The important question about the soldier bonus now is just what kind of a veto President Harding will give it. That he will veto it is by this time universally accepted, although the pro-bonus leaders apparently intend to go on the assumption that he will not.

It is said to be their intention to make an impressive country-wide demonstration with the purpose of bringing pressure on Mr. Harding at the moment when he has the bill in his hands.

The plan, it is said, is to precipitate a deluge of telegrams on the White House from republican governors, republican state chairmen, distant members of the republican national committee and other local republican leaders. This is expected to have the result of embarrassing President Harding and the republican party, even though it will be without effect in preventing the veto.

Discussion as to just what forms the veto could take engages the interest of many who are in close contact with the fight. There are three possible forms. One would be a strong, ringing veto, which would go to the heart of the principle of the bonus proposal. Those who want the president to make this kind of a veto say it would have two effects. One would be to end the whole bonus discussion and to put it out of consideration permanently, or at least until the end of the Harding administration.

Other Advantage Seen. The other advantageous effect pointed out by those who favor this kind of a veto would be the giving to the country of an impression of decision and strength on the part of Mr. Harding. It is held that a strong, firm veto message would overcome a groundswell of opinion now acknowledged to exist throughout the country adverse to Harding because of what is held by those who criticize him for his lack of patience, the lack of strong action and quick decisiveness in his course with regard to the bonus.

Why this sort of permanent veto, based on principle, may be difficult for Mr. Harding lies in the fact that in the past he has expressed himself as in favor of the principle of adjusted compensation for the soldiers.

This expression was made in the primary campaign preceding the presidential campaign. The expression was vague but nevertheless it is on the record. In this respect Harding is in much the same position as several senators who gave a more definite answer to the question when they had not thought it over fully and when they did not realize the amount of money involved.

Some of the reasons for the form which Harding's veto of the bonus could take. That form would be in the nature of postponement. President Harding might, from saying anything about the principle of the bonus and confine his reasons for the veto merely to saying that the present time is not the right time and the present weight of taxation are such that the government could not expend such a sum at present. That form of veto might or might not placate the American legion leaders. It would certainly be satisfactory to those opponents of the bonus who want the question settled now for all time.

The third form which the veto could take under the circumstances would consist merely of silence. If the senate should arrange to pass the soldiers' bonus and then recess without waiting for any message on it from the White House, this would have the effect of ending the bonus for the present session without Harding going on record on it one way or the other. With congress away, refraining from action by the president would have the effect of veto, in this would work out not so much for Harding's comfort as to give relief to the rather more embarrassed senators.

To the republican senators—or at least to those of them who are going to vote for the bonus—this course would have the greatest advantage of relieving them from the necessity of going on record on a rollcall to pass the bonus over the president's veto.

interest in that it is proved that the men were strikers and were working under the direction of union leaders, the international union under a recent decision of the United States supreme court may be held liable for all damage in connection with the wreck.

Meanwhile, throughout the nation conditions were reported as increasingly serious. All train service on the Chicago & Alton on its western division was halted through the refusal of brotherhood members to take trains out.

Small Towns Face Famine. Small towns along the division line, without train service for more than three days, were facing famine conditions. Some of these villages, notably Woodson, Murraysville, Manchester, Berdan, Drake, Delhi, Hillside, Pleasant Hill, Peori and Nemo, were reported as commanding all available trucks to establish a relay service that provisions might be obtained.

The bombing of two bridges and a railroad track at Roodhouse was followed today by a pitched battle between United States deputy marshals and an automobile load of strikers, two of whom were captured and lodged in jail at Springfield, Ill. They gave the names of W. S. Beyer and E. Y. Ramsey, both of Roodhouse. The name of a deputy marshal, shot in the arm, could not be learned.

Bomb Thrown at Home. At Bloomington, Ill., an attempt was made today to bomb the home of J. Hickok, general foreman of the Chicago & Alton shops. The blast, without waiting for any message on it from the White House, this would have the effect of ending the bonus for the present session without Harding going on record on it one way or the other.

Two Brothers Killed. At Camak, Ga., Dan and Bailey Lattimore, brothers, were shot and killed by W. T. Hall, a guard in the Georgia railroad yards, after an argument. In Chicago, a dispute over authority led to the shooting of George Newberry by Edward T. Burns. Both were watchmen employed in the Chicago & Alton yards.

At Chaffee, Mo., Paul Mattingly, local chairman of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, notified the Frisco railroad that unless national guardsmen were withdrawn from the members of his union would walk out.

At Havelock, Neb., Governor McKelvie walked out on the platform during a meeting of 1000 strikers and told them that unless disorders ceased, he would call out state troops and put the troops on guard in every railroad center in the state.

BEAUTY HAS NEW FROCK

ANOTHER PRETTY DRESS IS GIVEN MISS PORTLAND.

Virginia Edwards Has so Busy Time That She Wishes for Few Moments of Relaxation.

Miss Portland, winner of the Oregonian beauty contest, must be having a happy time, trying on new dresses and accessories, being fêted by her friends, attending social affairs as guest of honor and being sought after and given good wishes by everybody—this, at least, is the popular idea of the joys of being a beauty contest winner.

Then just ahead is a delightful trip to Atlantic City, the national pageant of beauty, where Miss Portland will be an honored guest throughout the festivities, a princess of King Neptune's court and a contestant in the national contest to determine America's loveliest girl.

But Virginia Edwards, charming Portland girl who had the honor of representing this city at the Atlantic coast competition given her as the result of winning The Oregonian contest, had so many things to do yesterday that she was kept on the move every minute and once she sighed for a few moments of relaxation that she could call her own.

COLLINS LAID TO REST

It was placed on the coffin lid, and was tenderly laid there again until the coffin was lowered to the grave.

At the grave side, Richard Mulrany, who succeeds as commander-in-chief of the national army, speaking of the life work and the ideals of Michael Collins for Irish freedom, said solemnly: "Michael Collins can never be buried, for his spirit will live to guide to achievement his ideals."

All Religious Pay Tribute. Though he was buried in accordance with the rites of the Roman Catholic church, all religions, as a whole, joined in today's national tribute.

Dr. Fogarty, bishop of Killaloe, was the celebrant of the mass, which was attended by a great gathering of clergy, including Archbishop Duhig of Brisbane, Australia, Archbishop Curley of Baltimore, who is visiting his aged mother at Athlone.

Work Held Indestructible. Bishop Fogarty likened Michael Collins to Joan of Arc. "It seems to be God's way," he said, "but the flames that extinguished that heroine's life did not destroy her works. So will it be with Michael Collins. The work he did is indestructible; he gave us more than Orleans."

Irishmen in the unexpected and the future is uncertain. If, however, one may judge by the expressions of the average citizen and the operators of the newspapers, the tragic removal of the nation's two great figures, Griffith and Collins, will not weaken the course of the free state but, on the contrary, will strengthen it, first, because it is backed by public opinion, and second, what is called the martyrdom of Griffith and Collins has rallied the people around the banner of patriotism.

GREAT WORLD BODY FOR PEACE PLANNED

Inadequacy of Present League Recognized.

EXPERTS STUDY FAULTS

New Project Designed to Unite Pan-American Union, League and Non-Member Nations.

GRENOBLE, France, Aug. 27.—(By the Associated Press.)—A new plan for a "world association of states" to link together the league of nations, the Pan-American union and those governments which are members of neither was submitted today to the institute of international law at its meeting here by Professor Alexandre Alvarez of Chile.

The plan was presented in the form of a report drafted by Professor Alvarez for the twenty-seven member commission of the institute which approved it at an executive session held in Paris from July 31 to August 3. The new association would be superimposed upon the present league and Pan-American union and would seek to encourage regional and continental groups rather than attempt to replace them entirely. It is designed to meet the American objections to the league of nations, with the primary purpose of co-ordinating the states of the world—not establishing a super-state.

Inadequacy Is Recognized. Six fundamental questions were submitted to the institute's members, comprising many nationalities. Forty replies were received and studied.

The inadequacy of the present league as a world grouping was frankly recognized and it was deemed wiser to let it remain as a sort of European organization. The insufficiency of the league was declared to be based largely upon the attitude of the United States toward the absence of Germany and Russia.

Other objections urged against the league were that it limits the sovereignty of its member states, makes admission and withdrawal too difficult and takes a view of things too exclusively European.

International Body Wanted. While the league has many merits, its operation, the report finds, has tended rather to separate than to draw Europe and America closer together. Europe, it is held, needs an international organization more than does America, for Europe is less stable politically and there are more rivalries and ambitions.
