TUTT'S CLASH

Harry Crashes Jackson to Canvas in Third Round.

NEGRO WINS IN WALK

Black Shadow Crosses Dempsey's
Horizon—Victor Massacres
Ohioan From Beginning.

BY HUGH FULLERTON.
(By Chicago Tribune Leased Wire.)
NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—Washington Courthouse, O. was erased from the pugilistic map at Ebbets field, Brooklyn, tonight when Tut Jackson, heralded as coming champion, was annihilated by Harry Wills. And as Jackson crashed face downward on the canvas in the third round, a big black shadow crossed Jack Dempsey's horizon.

Wills won so easily that he did not lose a kink out of his hair, massacred Jackson from the moment he sized up the Ohioan's style, and with scarcely an effort at his jaw, he hammered him into helplessness with stomach and kidney blows, finishing him with a terrific right drive on the kidneys after two minutes and five seconds of the third round.

Tut's Blows Lack Steam.
Jackson tried, but he never had a chance. He sought to rush the fight at the start and had the panther momentarily worried, although he did not land a clear blow. He was fighting after the Harry Greb style, coming in swinging all the time, but he lacked Greb's speed and his blows seemingly lacked power.

Wills, considered from the standpoint of Dempsey, looks a more dangerous now than he did. He settled the question of his ability as a body puncher, but he fights wide open and it looks as if Dempsey would rip through his wide defense and murder him with short-arm body blows.

The power Wills' body blows was so great that Jackson was unable to withstand them. Wills fought his usual fight, used his old trick of drawing his left up under his opponent's arm pit and pretending the other fellow was holding, all the while, using his right viciously on the side and kidneys.

Hot Content and Tragic.
The scrap was worth while for its comedy features—it was comedy for us, but tragedy for poor Jackson. In the first round long range, Jackson suddenly pitched and landed on his face and closed his eyes to take a nap. The roar of the crowd awakened him, however, and he jumped up to take more of it—and took an overdose. It was declared later that he was almost out on his feet from the effects of a stomach blow in that first round, and that it hurt him so much he was unable to fight his fight. No one got a line on Jackson's form—because he has none. He tried to fight, discovered that he could not hurt his heavier opponent and was willing to call it a day any time. In the third round just before the finish, he draped himself over the lower rope and was willing to hang there and die—but rallied again, staggered to the center of the ring, took a left in the stomach, doubled up and began to sink. Then Wills crashed down onto his kidneys with his right and the pride of Clinton county went away from there.

Round 1.
Jackson rushed at Wills and missed a left swing and they went into clinch. Jackson was warned for holding, but he refused to let go. Wills stood wide open waiting for another rush, and when it came, landed a right hook to the jaw, which clinched and separated, and Wills rushed Jackson to the ropes. Following this, Wills landed heavy right flush on Jackson's jaw and floored him for the count of seven. He staggered and into a clinch and held on till the end of the round.

Round 2.
Jackson once more got into a clinch as quickly as possible and Wills delivered hard kidney punches and attempted to connect on the jaw. Jackson attempted to lead with his right, but failed to land and he was pinned against clinch. Wills battered him hard with his right to the clinches, finally delivering a right hook to the jaw, which had Jackson groan again. But Jackson came out, taking a left, and another on the head until the bell saved him.

Round 3.
It was the same story again, Jackson was trying to hold on and maintain his position with right-hand swings to the kidneys. The referee had called them apart and Wills then connected with the jaw with a left, which made Jackson groan, whooping and howling and hook into the stomach and followed with a terrific right into Jackson's kidneys, which doubled him up on the floor for the full count of ten.

"I THINK this stuff about your being a king's favorite is all the bunk—you act more like a Sunday school teacher," declares the hero to Gloria Swanson, playing in "Her Glided Cage," at the Columbia theater this week. And it was more than the bunk! It was the "cat's whiskers," Holy smoke! This is a new one!

"Glorious Gloria" is given another chance to wear some stunning gowns in this production. There is nothing particularly new about the theme. But it is treated differently and that gives it a novel touch. The settings are elaborate. The creations worn by Miss Swanson are gorgeously bizarre and theatrical. But she appears first in the story as a poor French dancer, who subsequently blossoms forth under the guidance of an American press agent, who gives her the designation of being a king's favorite.

But it was the "king's favorite" thing that sent the man who sincerely admired her recoiling from her presence. Later he leaves France, meeting her in America, where she is the reigning theatrical hit of the season. The fabric of the fertile press agent's deception to fool the public is penetrated at last by the artist, and the true worth of the girl is revealed to him.

ANZACS ARE TURNED BACK

TILDEN-RICHARDS WIN NATIONAL DOUBLES TITLE.

Helen Willis Gives Molla Hard
Rub in Play for Singles
Championship for Women.

BOSTON, Aug. 29.—(By the Associated Press.)—The national championship in lawn tennis doubles remains in the United States. The Australian invasion, which has as its triple objective the Davis cup, the doubles title and the singles championship, was defeated in its secondary phase when W. T. Tilden II and Vincent Richards, playing through titlists, turned back Gertrude L. Patterson and Pat O'Hara Wood, Antipodean stars, after losing the first set. The scores were: 4-6, 6-1, 6-3, 6-4.

The match, which had a double significance because of its bearing on the doubles play in the forthcoming Davis cup tournament, for which the contenders of today have been regarded as the probable nominees, was marked by the irresistible team effort of the Americans following their opening setback.

Against the rash of Tilden's booming volleys and their complete court covering, the individual efforts of O'Hara Wood availed little, although it, shone at times. Patterson had an off day. One of the greatest servers in the tennis world, he lost as many service games as he won. A player well in back-hand plays, he found himself the object of an attack that counted often against his team.

Tilden attained another title today also, pairing with Mrs. Molla B. Mallory to combat the national title holders in men's and women's singles, as the national mixed doubles champions. Their victory over Miss Helen Willis and Howard O. Kinsey, fellow Californians, was accomplished without great strain, 6-4, 6-3.

Of greater interest among the spectators, probably the largest that has ever seen a tennis programme in this city, was the singles match which Mrs. Mallory won from Miss Willis. The champion, who defended her title successfully against the girl recently at Forest Hills, N. Y., found her a more difficult opponent today and it was only after losing the first set to her and halting decisions in the third that she won, 3-6, 6-3, 7-5. The final point was played under unusual circumstances when, after the crowd had roared and cheered its approval of a line umpire's decision which would have given victory to the champion, Mrs. Mallory turned the ball and Miss Willis netted the ball and Mrs. Mallory's victory was made complete.
