The Barde and Fleischhacker interests were the principals in the purchase earlier in the year of uncompleted hulls in Lake Washington, on North Portland harbor and at Alameda, and various plans for their future have been rumored, even to flitting some of the hulls with oil-burning engines. The only move as to the Portland vessels has been to draw three of them from the fleet to be used in conjunction with salvage operations at the scene of the wreck of the steamer Weish Prince, the contract for which M. Barde & Sons also hold.

On her first trip into Grays Harbor, the Japanese freighter Kaisha Maru, operated by Susuit & company, was sighted at the bar early this afternoon. She will the up at the Bishop mill delphins, to load approximately 1,750,000 feet of Japanese squares.

The steamers Nehalem and Providence and the motorship William Donovan left for California late yesterday afternoon. The big freighter Redondo is finishing cargo at the Northwestern mill. Hogulam, and is expected to clear for the easy coast late this afternoon. The Japanese steamship Havre Maru is scheduled to arrive tomorrow from the orient.

The steamer Solano is expected to reach boats with tows, because of the current created. For years steamers handling passengers and freight between Portland and St. Helens and Rainier have used the slough route, being able to overcome the current, but with towhoats the flow is too strong at ordinary stages of water. Another point is that log rafts are drawn from the lower part of the slough and it is necessary at present for steamers to tow them to the main river by way of St. Helens. While the new bill grants authorsity for removing the works, funds are not yet provided for.
