35,000 PLURALITY EXPECTED
Poindexter's Strength Increased by Division of Foes.

PUGET SOUND BUREAU, Seattle, Wash., Sept. 13.—This is the day for recriminations and "I told you so's" with the forces lately and variously engaged in the effort to defeat Miles Poindexter for the republican nomination to the United States senate, and they are all going strong.
Senator Poindexter's plurality when the returns are all in should reach 35,000, it is assumed that the surface showing of the returns will make him a minority candidate. It will be the simplest sort of arithmetic to add up the votes cast for Poindexter. The margin will not be very heavy, but it probably will be enough to convince many that had the anti-Poindexter vote been centered on one candidate Poindexter would have been defeated. That is what the opposition forces have been saying right along, yet nothing could be done to bring about the desired limitation and concentration. The conclusion that Poindexter is honestly a minority republican candidate is not entirely justified by disinterested analysis of the vote. It is not so simple as it seems, the votes cast for Lamping, Griffiths and Axtell could have been controlled for either of the three. Judge Griffiths, for example, has been the most hostile to the Hearst programme and the Post-Intelligencer's plan of campaign. He could scarcely have had that support. The women associated in Mrs. Axtell's campaign would not have supported Lamping under any circumstances. Had it been possible to eliminate two of the three candidates there would have been a marked slump in the anti-Poindexter vote. More important, however, is the fact that the anti-Poindexter vote as cast in the republican primaries is not wholly a republican vote. It is a vote cast in the history of the direct primary when invasion by outsiders was not a thing to be feared and notorious. The vote in the democratic and farmer-labor primaries in all parts of the state is so small as to be negligible.

Most of the Lamping vote and much also of the Axtell vote came from outside the republican party. It was promised in advance, strongly encouraged by the Post-Intelligencer and the Seattle Union Record, and it was delivered. Here and there republicans voted in the republican primary Senator Poindexter would have won his nomination by a very substantial margin over all his competitors, but expectation of the vote on supreme court justices may throw some light on the situation.
The judiciary elections are non-partisan, but at least two of the candidates opposed to the present justices have a record of being fully identified with the anti-republican forces of the state that it is inconceivable that they would have any republican support. Yet the vote cast for them is far in excess of the totals cast in the democratic and farmer-labor primaries. That thousands of their supporters participated in the republican primaries.
The apparent defeat of two of the present supreme court justices will doubtless be acclaimed as a victory for the so-called progressive elements. It is more properly attributable to the fact that the outside candidates had every opportunity to play politics with the incumbent justices while some of the incumbent justices were handicapped by considerations of propriety.

Incumbent is leading in race for County Commissioner.
The fight on Senator Poindexter will be immediately resumed this afternoon. Much of the anti-Poindexter vote of the primary election will sort itself out in support either of C. C. Dill, the democratic senatorial nominee or of James A. Duncan, the republican candidate. Effort has been made already to bring two together for a conference on the possibility of one or the other getting out of the way. Neither Dill nor Duncan will be my fellow man. A just God would not keep me out of heaven because I had sinned when life became intolerable. Give Rosina and the other sisters and the brothers a good night, and bid them to love me. You and I were so happy—through all our trials and joys. No shadow came over my life until my dear wife's trouble began. I tried to hide from you, but your loving arms drew me back. Of course you know I'm innocent of Rosina's death. Every impulse of my heart is to avenge her death, but I don't want to hurt anybody. I'm so thankful you and the boys believed in me and continued to love me. I wish I might hold you in my arms for what you have done for me so deeply, tenderly, truly. God bless you. I'll wait for you.

To Warden Lewis of the prison Dr. Brumfield left the following letter, coupled with a postscript designating how a few articles might be left in his cell should be disposed of:
Dear Mr. Lewis—Under the circumstances, life is not worth living, and Dr. Smith's statement that my neuritis is incurable, leaves me with no other matter for me.
I am innocent of the crime of murder. Rosina could not believe that what happened that night they thought I had done.

Several important points were overlooked by the jury. Several state witnesses testified seeing the inmate in the cell wearing a straw Panama hat. I possessed such a hat and it was found in my office in the building. It would have been impossible for me to return it to the prison.
Clothes Are Questioned.
Two doctors testified that the two shoes in Russell's book were made after the murder, and that the buttons inside the body from them. The only persons who would shoot into a dead body are an insane man or one who had killed the victim and saw a chance to get someone else's "Last testament" underlined.

If I were substituting another man's shoes, I would leave two pairs of shoes on him and all kinds of marks of identification. The ring on Russell's finger was one I saw at times but which I carried in my pocket most of the time. I had a blood-stained handkerchief on my finger when I worked on the ranch. Also I mixed my amalgam filling in the palm of my hand, and the mercury would get on my ring. The suit of clothes I wore at the time of the murder was found at the scene of the wreck, partly burned, according to prosecution testimony.
Who knows when Russell got into the cell? Perhaps he slipped from that gray suit of mine. His letter was found in his pocket (that was brought out at the trial) and he had asked him to leave her alone—that she was married and did not want him to break up her home. He had a key to the door. Charles F. Jaekel, 985; A. J. Ahoia, 744; Engineer, W. F. Byars, 788; Clyde Spaulding, 904; County Commissioner, John D. Forbes, 2426; R. A. Byrket, 33.

Liquor Declared Drugged.
Records in the case showed that Dr. Brumfield had been a dentist and social leader of Roseburg, up to the night of July 13, 1921, possibly during the time he was offering his well temporary employment. The prosecution contended that Russell later entered the Brumfield car which had been filled with drugged liquor and afterward taken to a point a few miles south of the Russell home. The car was wrecked and partly burned, and under the chassis was found the badly mutilated body which afterward was identified as that of Russell.
Body Thought Drugged.
The burning car was first discovered by some Roseburg young men and the incident was reported to the officers. An investigation followed, and at first it was presumed that Brumfield had returned to Roseburg and then continued east to the place where he shunted his automobile from the road into a deep ravine. The car was wrecked and partly burned, and under the chassis was found the badly mutilated body which afterward was identified as that of Russell.

Slayer Caught in Canada.
With this damning evidence at hand officers were sent to all parts of the United States and Canada asking for Brumfield's arrest. On August 12, 1921, came the report that Brumfield had been arrested near Calgary where he had been employed as a farm hand under the name of Norman Whitney.
He then was returned to Roseburg and the trial followed in October with Judge G. Bingham of Salem presiding. He was convicted of first degree murder, and sentenced was passed on October 31. He was accused of the murder of Rosina Brumfield on the same day and was to have been hanged January 13 of this year.
Brumfield later appealed his case to the supreme court, which in a decision handed down here a few weeks ago affirmed the verdict of the jury. The court's opinion in the case then was filed and this was still pending in the supreme court when Brumfield committed suicide today.

Large Debts Indicated.
Summarized, the evidence in the Brumfield case indicated that he was heavily in debt, and thought by prison officials that tonight the doctor would be able to get out of the country and his wife would be in a position to collect his insurance.
Local attorneys today, after learning that Brumfield had committed suicide, said it was their opinion that Brumfield would now be able to collect her husband's insurance, aggregating approximately $20,000. Brumfield's attorney, however, said that he had watched Brumfield closely, and that a guard had passed his cell every week, when he took his meals, in which the doctor arranged the interior of his cell, however, probably served to elude any suspicion on the part of the guard. He gave the prisoner plenty of time to commit the act.

At 10:30 this morning Dr. Brumfield was taken to the cell in the ward, which were delivered to his cell. Part of these had been eaten by a prisoner before he committed suicide.
Insurance policies carried by Brumfield included $16,000 in the Oregon Life Insurance company, $3000 in the Mutual Life Insurance company and $1000 in the New York Life Insurance company. Of the insurance carried in the Oregon Life Insurance company $6000 was written May 2, 1921, or less than three months prior to the murder.

Dr. W. C. Cannon, prison physician, in a statement tonight said that he was called to attend Dr. Brumfield yesterday and found that he was suffering from a severe attack of neuritis.
"Dr. Brumfield was far from well when I talked with him yesterday in his cell," said Dr. Cannon, "and I informed him it probably would be several weeks before he would recover completely from his ailment."
Mrs. Brumfield last visited her husband in the penitentiary here last Sunday. At that time the doctor apparently was in the best of spirits. Prior to leaving for Portland two weeks ago Mrs. Brumfield had called on her husband once each week, when he took his meals, and reading material and provided him with such other delicacies as are allowed under the prison rules.
Mrs. Brumfield now is employed in a Portland apartment house under an assumed name.
Beside his widow, Dr. Brumfield is survived by three small boys, two of whom are staying with an aunt in California; his parents and several brothers and sisters in Indiana. Mrs. Brumfield is the wife of Dr. Patrick of Williams. Mrs. Patrick is the wife of a well known Southern Pacific conductor.
