PETITION PROBE LIKELY

ALLEGED FRAUD CASES TO BE INVESTIGATED.

District Attorney Myers to Ask for Transcript of Evidence in Grange Hearing.

The possibility of a grand jury investigation of the methods used by petition circulators to obtain signatures to initiative measures has been announced by District Attorney Myers, as a result of evidence of fraud brought out during the hearing of the state grants graduated income tax case before Circuit Judge Bingham.

"I will ask for a transcript of the evidence in the case and if I find sufficient cause for an investigation the entire matter will be referred to the grand jury," said Mr. Myers.

Witnesses during the hearing of the case testified they had been asked by circulators to sign the petitions because it was for the purpose of reducing the price of bread, or to reduce car fares or in some cases just because the circulator was paid for each name.

Things You'll Love to Make.

A Cretonne-Trimmed Luncheon Set. You can make this cretonne-trimmed luncheon set at very little cost. Use squares of unbleached muslin—a large square for the centerpiece and small ones for the doilies and napkins. Cut the flower motives out of left-over pieces or remnants of cretonne. Leave a little margin around each motive. Turn in a small hem and buttonhole these motives in each corner of the large square. Use smaller motives for the other pieces. Buttonhole a narrow hem around each piece. Make running stitches in wool or mercerized silk as shown in the illustration. A set like this makes a handsome gift for a bride.

Problems of Dressmaking

by Madam Richet

Dear Madam Richet: Will you kindly note where one may secure a "vest" form fashioned on the figure with the gummied paper tape, such as is taught in courses? PERPLEXED.—There is a very capable person who makes the forms of which you write and I regret that I cannot here mention the name. But this paper did carry the advertisement and through the department dealing in that line you may be enabled to get your information. The trade name is, as I recall it, the "Nu-form."

NEWPORT, Aug. 20.—Dear Madam

Richet: I have a quantity of gray lamb fur. How can I use it? Will fur be worn on dresses this winter? I need a cape and trim it with the gray lamb (I am a college girl and quite tall). What material and what pattern should I get for caps? Can I use a Paisley shawl for any purpose? I have more "hairbons" than money. I have a navy blue suit to make into a one-piece dress. What material shall I use with it and how shall I widen the skirt? Thanking you in advance for all your trouble, sincerely yours, SALLY.

Sally, Newport, Or.—Several of the issues I enjoy using are not to be found in many of the smaller towns, and so I almost hesitate referring you to the Style for October, page 24, center cut. Your fur will find very attractive usage should you copy the model pictured. Also in the Butterick Quarterly for fall you will find a clever line of cape (page 35, No. 3733). The fur can line the entire outer edge and the collar will be a base for a splendid, luxurious collar.

You very fortunate person to own a "really, truly" Paisley shawl! Purchase the long black silk fringe and bank the fringe already on. Turn over a corner and to not quite the half diagonal line gather as a ruche collar and tie with the long black silk cord with the tasseled ends. This will serve as a very stunning party wrap and later on your garters can be let out, the cord ties set out and behold a fetching throw for your grand piano.

For the widening of your blue skirt I suggest the use of the figured canton, setting in the ripple panel as shown on the cover design of the McCall Quarterly for fall. The seam of joining will be little seen, and no objection if it is noticed. Then for the blouse I would have you copy the blouse of dress shown in the same number (page 13, No. 2835). The figured canton also can be used for the vest and sleeves and you will readily see how effective this finished line will be. The edge of the blouse fronts can be finished with either the pssot, or the binding run in the three rows of rope silk, the blue matching your material or the black. If you follow the suggestion here given you will have a very attractive bit of wardrobe, and all different than usually seen—which, after all, is the chief charm of the well-dressed woman.

Curtain Trimmings. What counts most in curtaining windows is not the material you use, but the way in which you use it. Curtains of cheery cloth, if they are well planned and wisely hung, may have far more style and make a much better showing than curtains of expensive lace that have been hung up without much care or judgment.

A very little well-chosen trimming that costs only a few cents a yard will often add not only a pleasing touch of color but a distinct note of elegance as well. Take, for instance, squares of the black and white French gimps. These may be appropriately used with white Euclid batiste or cheesecloth. Or, again, a narrow blue or rose-colored cotton gimp with short fringe may be used with highly satisfactory results as cheesecloth trimming.

White figured net and dotted Swiss curtains or muslin curtains may be treated in the same way and thus given a great deal of distinction. Swiss curtains may also be trimmed with narrow bands of colored sateen, one or two inches wide, sewed on instead of the broad bottom and side hems.

In making use of colored curtain trimming, however, care must be taken that the color employed echoes some other color conspicuous in the furnishing of the room.

At this time of the year it is reasonable to have afternoon tea served on the porch or on the lawn, if the entertainers are lucky enough to possess even a little stretch of greensward.

A wicker table and a few cozy chairs may be ready on the veranda before the guests arrive. Then it is easy to wheel out the tea wagon containing the necessary china, silver and doilies, the little cakes and bonbons and the center of the attraction, the steaming teapot with its accompanying sugar bowl, pitcher
