$71,170 AWARDED INSURANCE AGENT

Lew Wallace Wins Breach of Contract Verdict.

TRIAL TAKES 3 WEEKS. Action Against American Life Company Results in Record Judgment in Country.

One of the largest damage verdicts ever handed down by a jury in the Multnomah county circuit court was given Lew Wallace, executor for the American Life Insurance company in the state of Oregon, when he was awarded $71,170.33 yesterday in a suit brought against his erstwhile employer, the alleged breach of contract. He asked approximately $75,000.

Appointment is in 1915. Mr. Wallace was appointed Oregon agent for the American Life Insurance company on November 10, 1915, and left its employ on May 15, 1921, or June 30, 1921, depending on whether his version of the date on which he says the company discharged him is accepted or the claim of the concern as to the date on which he broke his contract and "fired" himself.

When Mr. Wallace left the employ of the American Life Insurance company of Des Moines, Ia., its stock had been purchased by the Northern Assurance company of Michigan and its name changed to the American Life Insurance company of Michigan. The plaintiffs claim, which was believed by the jury, was that the combination of circumstances constituted a conspiracy of agencies and that subsequent actions of the company were designed to get rid of him. They ordered him to be reinstated and eliminated his $100 a month salary guarantee.

Business Would Build Up. Under the original contract held by Mr. Wallace, which he contended was abrogated by the insurance company, he was to receive from 35 to 40 per cent of the first year premium on all new business written, depending on the nature of the policy, from 10 to 30 per cent on the second annual premium, from 7 to 15 per cent on the third annual premium, and 5 per cent on all subsequent premiums paid.
