braced with stretchers, which were also usually turned, in a manner corresponding with the legs.

Figure A in the cut shows an early American, small table belonging to the "turned-leg" family. The heavy legs were made for all manner of different purposes. In shape the tops were rectangular, round or oval, and might either project but a little beyond the underframing, to which they were firmly attached, or else they might be provided with drop leaves. Sometimes drawers, one or more in number, were set within the underframing; then, again, as great many were made without drawers. Besides having turned legs, tables of this sort almost invariably had the legs firmly

New Today in the Markets

Tomatoes, both ripe and green, are still being shown in the markets, despite the fact that the first rains usually crack them. It rains continues in any quantity, however.

It will damage this vegetable, and housewives who have not made their supply of catsup and chili sauce should not delay longer. Four pounds for 10 cents is the general price on ripe tomatoes.

The first meddiers have arrived in the market and are priced at 15 cents a pound. These are a winter fruit of the persimmon family and are considered delicious by many. Quinces are selling four pounds for a quarter, and those shown yesterday were large and good looking. They are desirable for quince honey and for jelly in combination with other juices.

The new crop of Oregon nuts is expected to arrive on the Portland market next week. This will include Oregon walnuts, of select quality, at about 50 cents a pound; filberts, at 40 and 50 cents a pound, and select wild hazelnuts at 40 cents a pound. Little eastern chestnuts are already offered at 65 cents a pound and Oregon chestnuts at 25 cents. Brazil nuts, which are an April crop, are 25 cents a pound, and Paradise nuts, a fancy product of Brazil, are 31 a pound. New almonds are priced at 40 cents a pound. Read The Oregonian classified ads.

Household Problems
by Lillian Tingle

PORTLAND, Or., Oct. 12.—Dear Miss Tingle: Will you please tell me how to prepare grated horseradish so it will keep indefinitely? Mine always turns dark if kept any length of time.

I DON'T know of any way of making grated horseradish keep "indefinitely." Its flavor is due to a very volatile essential oil that is dissipated by heat or on exposure to light and to air. The "goodness" of any horseradish preparation depends upon its freshness of making. Hence you will find that horseradish is seldom put up in "long keeping" form and where it is, it will usually be found either discolored or "characterless" or both, when opened.

For sale it is best made "fresh and fresh" and offered in small jars or cans that will be used up before it has time to deteriorate.

The roots themselves can usually be kept in good condition if buried in sand in a cool place.

The grated product should be covered as soon as grated with white vinegar (with or without a very little salt) and sealed at once with acid proof screw sealers. In this way it will keep in fairly good condition for a short time, but deterioration begins as soon as it is grated. Possibly some reader may have a suggestion to offer.

SANDY, Or.—Dear Miss Tingle: Will you please give me a recipe for catsup with a flavor as near as possible to product as you can. Thanks for the many helps I have found in your column.

For each gallon tomato pulp thus obtained, allow 3 tablespoons salt, 4 tablespoons sugar, 1 tablespoon imported powdered English mustard, 1 tablespoon each whole cloves, peppercorns, allspice, stick cinnamon (broken), 2 small red pickling peppers, 1 pint cider vinegar, 1 clove garlic if liked, 4 tablespoons ground Hungarian paprika (may be omitted, but improves both color and flavor). Tie the whole spices in a bag (with or without a clove of garlic), mix the other ingredients smoothly with a little vinegar. Cook with the spices until the desired consistency (usually about 1 1/2 hours), boiling rapidly to secure a good color and stirring often to prevent burning. Add the vinegar and powdered ingredients and finish cooking until as thick as desired. Pour hot into sterilized bottles, corking loosely with corks that have been boiled 10 minutes. Put the bottles in a wash-bottle with water halfway up the bottles, cover, raise to boiling point and boil one hour from the time when boiling began. Drive the corks firmly into the bottles. Allow to cool, then dip the corks and necks of the bottles into hot melted paraffin.
