Octet of Woodwinds Is Required in Symphony.

Flutes, Oboes, Clarinets and Bassoons Essential.

BY P. E. N.

IN ADDITION to a quintet of strings, a symphony orchestra must have a full octet of woodwinds, two flutes, two oboes, two clarinets and two bassoons. These eight instruments are indispensable to an orchestra which aspires to be a "symphony" orchestra. Very frequently, two other woodwinds, the piccolo and the English horn, are called for by composers of symphonic music.

The piccolo is not illustrated in the accompanying group of woodwinds because so closely resembles the flute. The piccolo is half as long as the flute and sounds an octave higher. The voice of the piccolo is shrill and impish, that of the flute clear and birdlike, while the oboe's voice is more human. The English horn is the alto oboe, and its peculiarly rich and melancholy tone-quality is due in part to its globe-shaped lower end. One of the most famous passages for the English horn is in the "Largo" of Dvorak's "New World" symphony, which the Portland symphony orchestra will play November 15.

The mouthpieces of the oboe and English horn are formed by two narrow reeds. The mouthpiece of the clarinet is chisel-shaped and its lower end is bell-shaped. Its voice, cloaked in a tenor, has been called "the voice of heroic love."

The bassoon supplies the bass for the woodwind choir of the orchestra. It may be said to resemble by the crook which projects from its side and which forms its mouthpiece.

Spanish beans, No. 1.—Soak red Mexican beans over night and par-boil in salted water until easily pierced, but not broken or mushy. Drain and add to one quart cooked beans one can tomatoes, one finely chopped onion, one clove garlic (may be omitted if garlic is disliked), three or four tablespoons salad oil or bacon fat, one teaspoon mustard, one or two teaspoons sugar, one tablespoon vinegar with salt and Spanish pepper to taste. Mix all together and cook in a bean pot or drop-proof baking dish until the beans are very tender and thoroughly soaked in the tomato dressing. Add cayenne or tabasco if a very hot dish is liked. Some makers add a few grains each of powdered cloves and mace with the Spanish pepper. Serve the beans in their own sauce, plain or boiled rice or with chili con carne.

Another way of making the sauce in which the beans are cooked is to add some rich brown meat stock to the tomatoes and other ingredients and boil the mixture under a good deal before adding it to the par-boiled beans.

There are several other methods of serving and the sauce may be varied almost indefinitely in flavor, color and pepperiness.

Housewife's Idea Box

An Interesting Girdle, Chic and Easy to Make.

YOU will find the girdle shown both easy to make and extremely smart looking on a serge or pointed twill frock. Fit a belt of silk around your frock. Join the ends of heavy wool to its lower edge. Make a long braid, using several pieces of the wool for each strand of the braid. Leave unbraided ends eight inches long. Tie a knot at the top of these ends, which form the tassels. Join the braid to the belt with a loop of wool. This girdle can be made separately and worn with different frocks.

Household Problems

by Lillian Tingle

PORTLAND, Oct. 19.—Dear Miss Tingle: Will you please publish different recipes for stuffed peppers, like the Mexican style? Many thanks.

IF to be used as a "main dish," the stuffing should consist chiefly (though not entirely) of chopped meat or flaked fish, or grated cheese, or eggs in some form, combined with "flavor materials" and "binding materials," such as crumbs of saucers, with or without a little starchy material, such as rice or potato.

But if they are to be used as "meat accompaniments," then the main ingredient in the stuffing will be "neutral-flavored material," such as crumbs, or rice, or corn, or macaroni, or potatoes, with some pungent flavor material and perhaps a small quantity of ham or bacon, onion, tomato or grated cheese to give "character."

Following is an example of the latter, or "meat accompaniment" type: Stuffed green peppers.—Select uneven-sized medium large peppers, either fresh or salted and freshened. Remove the stem and scoop out the soft part of the inside. For each tomato allow about one-half slice bacon (or a similar amount of ham) finely chopped, a teaspoon of finely chopped onion, a teaspoon of finely chopped green pepper (or parsley or chopped celery leaf if liked), a teaspoon of tomato catsup, a pinch of sugar and paprika pepper and salt to taste. Of course, no salt is needed if salted peppers are used. A few grains of cayenne or a hint of Spanish pepper or curry powder may be liked. Co. the bacon or ham up very fine and try it out, adding a little butter, oil or fat if very lean ham is used; then fry the onion to a delicate golden brown. Then add the other flavoring materials with the mixture, piling high and covering the top with buttered crumbs or crumbs mixed with dry grated cheese. Then bake until the pepper is well cooked and tender, basting with stock and melted butter and

by Madam Richet

OREGON CITY, Oct. 3.—Dear Madam Richet: I have a dark brown all-wool dress coat. The material is good as new, but the style is not what they are wearing this year. Could I make it over to suit the latest fashion?

The back is in two pieces, with the bottom section 22 inches wide at the bottom, graded and finished at the upper section at a high waist line, 12 1/2 inches from neck. The front is a simple, one-piece, 20 inches wide at bottom. The armhole is 20 inches around and the sleeve has a sewed-on cuff 2 1/2 inches long. There is a collar 2 1/2 inches wide and 2 1/2 inches long. There are two buttons which cross in front. Each cuff is 2 inches wide. The coat is lined throughout.

I am 5 feet 4 inches tall, weigh 112 pounds. Have brown hair and blue eyes, no color. Am 29 years old.

Thanking you in advance for any help you may give me, I am

A. A. U.

V. A. G. Oregon City, Or.—May I suggest that you make your coat into a dress-coat following the general style of the model shown in the fall quarterly of the Butterick, page 43, No. 352. The skirt to be of big brocade? Now should you not wish to combine with another material to such generous proportion then I would ask you to make a dress shown in the issue for November, page 25, No. 4508 D. Have the under inset of fawn satin, also the vest and upper portion of the sleeve. The ones to be of the gatin. The fitted-in line at the back of your coat is quite all right but the straight better if in recutting the sleeve. The ones to be of the gatin. With your coat's length it will be necessary to have an under hand of the satin as well as the inset at front side.

PORTLAND, Oct. 3.—Dear Madam Richet: I think planning a dress is the best part of an outfit for you please do that part for me. I have a suit like sample which I would like to make into one-piece dress. The skirt has set

Kayser costs less—because it lasts so long

WHAT'S the use of denying yourself the delightful luxury of silk underthings when you can wear Kayser Italian Silk Underwear—the finest of all silks—at less cost than other materials? Not for the same cost as other kinds, mind you, but actually for less.

If you don't know that, it's for only one reason—you've never worn KAYSER.

Pure silk—absolutely the best procurable—such as Kayser uses, is the most durable fabric on earth. And when you wear silk undergarments tailored to fit, reinforced where wear is greatest—the wonderful Kayser Marvelfit—you are getting more wear, more comfort than you can out of any other kind.

As for laundering—just place it in the basin with a good soap, dry it, iron it, and there it is.

Look for the starred label. One-star for medium weight. Three-star for heavy weight.
