There is a strong indication that some of the leading western schools, especially the University of Chi-cago, are planning to follow the big three in that policy. Chicago has had an expert from the university in Harvard the last week studying the Harvard system of football ticket distribution by which Harvard has succeeded in barring the public from its games and also barring a great majority of the old graduates from getting seats. Football Overdone, Opinion.

The athletic directors, coaches and the majority of those concerned in physical education are frankly of the opinion that football, east and west alike, has been overdone, in that it has overshadowed at times the other activities of the colleges and received indue prominence. But the strongest opponents of the sport the strongest opponents of the sport will not deny the financial import-ance of football which, in the ma-jority of the institutions, is the only money maker, and which supports track, field, rowing, gymnasium, swimming, baseball and basketball, as well as the physical drills. Even this, however, would not prevent the radical element among the faculties from voting to eliminate the sport but for the fact that it has proved its power in holding the alumni groups together, sustaining their interest in the colleges and bringing them into support of financial projects.
