

Albina project underway

The Albina Social Worker Project is a cooperative effort initiated by the Lutheran Family Service of Oregon and the Albina Community Action Center. Approximately one year ago, Lutheran Family Service established communication with Albina Community representative regarding the desirability and the feasibility of the project.

The Albina Community Action Center demanded the right to screen and approve individuals seeking the position in the program. This action represents a key concept in the nature of the project. In effect, this was a stamp of approval assuring community support and a cooperative effort between Lutheran Family Service and the Community. The social workers are responsible to the community for program direction, not the Lutheran Family Service. The nature of the project is essentially that of two free-lance workers, in the community, who can respond to community needs without the imposed limitations of an agency structure.

The general purpose of the project is to strengthen the capabilities of existing community organizations, link resources, assist in program development, and resolving problems in the area of personal relationship break-down, and emotional problems. Specific goals of the project are yet to be determined. The project will be evaluated over a three-year period by the School of Social Work at Portland State University.

The project provides direct service in the areas of counseling for individuals and families who are experiencing personal relationship break-down and emotional problems. Also, training with persons at all levels of the "helping people" profession, as well as, consultative services to individuals, groups, and agencies in the community.

As a newcomer to the community, I do not have any particular notion as to what this community needs. My approach to working with people is basically that of "moving with people, develop the capacity to people where they are at." My general concern for this community is that we, as Black meet our own needs and determine the destiny of our community.
