NAACP blasts 'Black English'

NEW YORK — An NAACP magazine Tuesday asked Negro parents to protest a Ford Foundation sponsored course teaching vernacular "Black English" to black students as their native language.

The current issue of the magazine carries an editorial criticizing the black english course taught by Prof. Carol Reed of Brooklyn College under a $65,000 grant from the foundation.

"What our children need and other disadvantaged American children as well — Indian, Spanish-speaking, Asian, Appalachian and migrant Americans — is training in basic English which today is as near an international language as any in the world," the editorial said. "To attempt to lock them into a provincial patois is to limit their opportunities in the world at large."

The magazine said Miss Reed was teaching about 50 black students to say such things as "He be-tired" instead of "He became tired." The editorial called this "black nonsense" and said Negro students have as much ability to master Oxonian English as anyone. It said the black dialect is more rational than racial and more southern than Negro.

Mark Harris to teach PSU class

A contemporary novelist, Mark Harris, will teach a four-week seminar, Reading our Contemporaries, July 12 to August 5 at Portland State University.

The three-credit seminar will focus on novels written by living Americans, James Dickey, Saul Bellow and Norman Mailer, who, according to Harris, are likely to be read beyond their time. Discussion will revolve around the authors and their books as art, social comment and autobiography.

Presently teaching at the California Institute of Arts, Harris has taught at San Francisco State College, Brandeis University, Purdue University and as a Fulbright Professor at the University of Hiroshima.

As a writer Harris has published eight novels, among them The Southpaw, Bang The Drum Slowly, and Wake Up Stupid. His most recent novel, The Goy, was published last year by The Dial Press.

The writer has received awards from the Ford Foundation National Institute of Arts and Letters, National Endowment for the Arts and the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation.

Enrollment in the upper-division class will be limited.

Snowmobile bill passed

SALEM — A Senate-passed bill requiring the registration of snowmobiles was approved by the House Monday.

SB 286 now returns to the Senate for concurrence with House amendments.

The bill establishes regulations and requirements for use of snowmobiles, on and off public roads, and for safety equipment.

It would require snowmobile operators to have a driver's license or certification of the completion of a course in snowmobile operation.

The bill also requires accident reports in designated situations where a snowmobile is involved.

Identification numbers would have to be displayed on snowmobiles.

Controls passed in care of pets

SALEM — The House Monday approved a Senate-passed bill which requires animal owners to provide food and water for their pets.

SB 583 prohibits confining an animal for 24 hours without adequate food or water and allows an officer to enter the premises and impound an animal that is so confined.

The bill was introduced at the request of the Oregon Humane Society.
