

Pan Am has stewardess graduation

Petite and pretty Etta Purifoy, of Mobile, Alabama, beams as she is "pinned" with gold wings that proclaim her a Pan American World Airways stewardess. Capt. Donal E. Kinkel, Vice President for Flight Operations, New York, does the honors at the International Stewardess College in Miami, Florida, where the young Americans pictured here recently graduated. Clockwise from top are Stephanie Reynolds, Jamaica, N.Y.; Earlene Rollins, Berkeley, California; Sandra Richardson, Detroit, Michigan; Maureen Cousins, Bronx, New York; Patricia Perrin, Brooklyn, New York; Sheila Brooks, Chicago; Gwendolyn Curry, Los Angeles, California; Cheryl Mansfield, Hyattsville, Maryland; Liz Van Dyke, Los Angeles, California and Marilyn Luker, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. All are based in New York, Washington, D.C. or Chicago.

Cloud nine is their address. Their home is a multi-million dollar jetliner cruising six miles high in the sky.

They are Pan American World Airways stewardesses, and those gold wings take them to six continents and all the Seven Seas, far below the equator and over the North Pole. The young Americans pictured here have all graduated in recent weeks from Pan Am's International Stewardess College in Miami, Florida. Now they have gone on to bases in New York, Chicago and Washington, D.C., to take up their duties on flight lines around the world. Some are already experienced globe-trotters. For others it's a first fling at foreign travel.

Two of these graduates, Gwendolyn Curry and Stephanie Reynolds, were named spokesmen (valdictorians) of their graduation classes. Gwen Curry, a pint-sized Californian from Los Angeles, graduated from California State College, majored in Math. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mildred James Curry, 1262 East 87th Place, Los Angeles, and is based in Washington, D.C.

Stephanie Reynolds is a former nurse and technician at Jamaica (New York) Hospital "Stevie" is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leon Reynolds, 111-29 146th St., Jamaica, and studied nursing at Queensborough Community College. From her Chicago base she flies to London, Amsterdam and Shannon, Ireland.

Patricia Perrin, of Brooklyn, N.Y., is based in Washington like Gwen Curry. They fly across the Atlantic to London, Paris and Berlin. "Pat" is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Perrin, 1597 President Street, Brooklyn, and is a 1970 graduate of the State University of New York at Stony Brook. It was back to the old hometown for Sheila Brooks, a former Chicago schoolteacher who graduated from Southern Illinois University. She's the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe

N. Brooks, 9545 South Forest, Chicago, has already visited Europe, The Bahamas and Caribbean resort capitals.

It's a long way from Jamaica in the West Indies to the North Atlantic Circle, but Maureen Cousins made the switch easily. She was born where the palm trees sway, grew up in New York, now is Chicago-based. Her mother is Mrs. Doris L. Daniel, 880 Boylston Ave., Bronx, N.Y. Maureen is a former fashion model and drama student.

Also Chicago-based are Marilyn Luker, of Philadelphia, Pa., and Etta Purifoy, of Mobile, Ala. Tall, fun-loving Marilyn is a 1970 graduate of Moore College of Art and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold H. Luker, 6114 W. Oxford St., Philadelphia.

Earlene Rollins is a designing woman from Berkeley, California, who had her own fashion studio in New York ("Raylo" was her label) before taking to the air with Pan Am. She attended Merritt College, is a former U.S. Atomic Energy Commission secretary and daughter of Mrs. Yvonne Rollins, 1639 Alcatraz Ave., Berkeley.

Others based in New York are former Los Angeles schoolteacher Elizabeth Van Dyke; Sandra Richardson, of Detroit, Mich., and Cheryl Mansfield, of Hyattsville, Md. Cheryl is a former Post Office clerk, a 1971 graduate of the District of Columbia Teachers College and was a cheerleader. Her parents are Mr. and Mrs. William H. Mansfield, 2125 Quincy St., N.E., Washington.

Already a seasoned traveller, Liz Van Dyke is a former New York University. She is the daughter of Mrs. Merrill Van Dyke, 3833 Monteth Drive, Los Angeles.

Our only world

A charge most often levelled at conservationists, environmentalists, survivalists, whatever you want to call them (us), as to imply that they (we) are regress. This absurdity is sometimes mouthed in such a way as to imply that they (we) are therefore anti-American. Let us examine the word progress because it seems to be one key to our present dilemma.

The American Heritage Dictionary defines progress as (1) Movement toward a goal (2) development; unfolding (3) steady improvements of a society or civilization. They also give: to advance; proceed and to advance toward a more desirable form. Nowhere does that definition imply faster or bigger, or any other such dimension.

Is faster of necessity better? If it is not better then how is it progress to achieve it? If it is not "a more desirable form" then why is it progress to go after it? By that same token, is bigger better? Automatically?

Both faster and bigger may be better under the right circumstances but not necessarily so. Somehow we must come up with a frame of reference we can use in each of the fights that obviously lie ahead of us - and fights they will be. The SST, the Alaskan Pipeline, rezoning of suburban and eventual rural property for multiple dwellings, highway construction, spending for our sick passenger railroads under their new management, urban renewal, the many problems of urban priorities, all of these things are going to have to be evaluated, some of them more than once, against a new yardstick that doesn't automatically assume that bigger is better.

And we had better find that yardstick because on every single issue there are going to be people pulling on both ends of the chain.

As we enter a period of renewed and justifiable confidence in American enterprise and American business there is going to be a perfectly understandable sigh of relief. When the long-awaited reawakening of the traditional American belief-in-self comes there also may be some foolish and even dangerous plans.

Minority Hiring Increase

Secretary of Labor J.D. Hodgson today announced that local parties have reached agreement on a Cleveland Plan for increasing minority hiring in construction trades.

Cleveland was one of the cities designated by the Labor Department last July for concentrated efforts to achieve equal job opportunity in the construction industry.

"This latest agreement is another encouraging step toward America's long-standing goal of equal employment opportunity," Secretary Hodgson said.

"But the signing of this agreement is not an end in itself," he added. "It is a beginning. Achievement of equity at the workplace is a day-to-day process that requires earnest efforts by all parties involved."

"For its part, the Labor Department will continue giving metropolitan areas the opportunity and assistance to develop area-wide, voluntary agreements that cover public as well as private construction."

Vida Blue

Reggie Jackson steals thunder from teammate Vida Blue

Fans packed the all-star game to see Vida Blue, but they went home buzzing about Reggie Jackson.

Blue, the sensational young lefthanded Oakland pitcher, with 17 victories at the mid-summer intermission, is the one the National League was anxious to watch with critical eyes--especially the Pittsburgh Pirates, who might face the young black and his mates in the next World Series.

Probably the forgotten man in this excellent team effort in the American League west by the Oakland club, Jackson reminded the 53,559 in attendance at Tiger Stadium and the countless millions watching on television that he ranks among the power hitters.

Trail Blazers trip to Southern Oregon

A pair of Southern Oregon clashes against the National Basketball Association's new Houston club will rank among highlights of the pre-season schedule of the Portland Trail Blazers.

The Blazers will play Houston - formerly the San Diego Rockets - on Thursday night, October 7, in Grants Pass and on Friday night, October 8, in Klamath Falls.

Both games will start at 8 p.m.

The name - Houston - is new and so is the coach, former University of Washington skipper Tex Winter.

But the Rockets, with Elvin (The Big E) Hayes, are an old story to the Blazers - and a painful one.

It didn't start that way. In pre-season play a year ago, the Rockets and the Blazers clashed once in a double-header in Seattle. And the Blazers won, 127-112, behind sparkling performances by Geoffrey Petrie, 35 points on 15 or 25 from the floor and 5-for-5 at the line, and Ed Manning, 22 points and 20 rebounds.

The big story was Hayes, former University of Houston star.

Hayes last season was Portland's second-highest-scoring opponent with 140 points in four games for a 35-point average against the Blazers.

He was the third-best rebounder against Portland - 76 in four tests for an average of 19 a contest.

Against the Blazers, no single opponent attempted more field goals (110) or more free throws (40) than the Big E.

And only two opponents played more minutes (175) than Elvin.

Hayes had some pretty fair help, too.

Former Boston Celtics star

Larry Siegfried earned 21 assists in one game against Portland - the highest total credited to any opponent all season. (Yeah, most of those passes reached the hands of Hayes.)

Stu Lantz averaged 21.3 points a game against Portland's first season NBA club, and little Cal Murphy, the rookie sensation from Niagara, posted a 14.8 scoring average against the Trail Blazers.

Against San Diego, Portland's most effective player was Petrie, who wound up sharing Rookie of the Year honors in the National Basketball Association.

Petrie averaged 20.3 points a game against San Diego - thanks chiefly to a 40 point outburst in his last meeting with the Rockets.

This season Petrie should have more help, especially from top draft choice Sidney Wicks of UCLA, plus such other highly-rated rookies as Charles Yelverton from Fordham, Larry Steele from Kentucky and seven-foot Bill Smith from Syracuse.

The games in Grants Pass and Klamath Falls - are the sixth and seventh of the pre-season schedule announced by the Trail Blazers.

Previously announced were clashes against Seattle on September 24 in Spokane, on September 24 in Spokane, and September 25 in Pendleton and

The Blazers also will face San Francisco on October 2 in Seattle in the opener of a twin bill which will wind up with Seattle playing Milwaukee.

On September 26 in Hood River, plus a meeting with Milwaukee's world champion Bucks on October 1 in Memorial Coliseum as a part of a Double-header that will open with Seattle facing San Francisco.
