Gray Christmases

by James L. Mack, M.D.

People used to dream of white Christmases where the treetops glisten. They still do. But polluted air is usually what they find in their wide-awake moments.

The treetops may glisten this Christmas in Kentucky, though.

The first ecology court in the country was set up in Louisville and Jefferson County. Anyone who violates the strict anti-pollution laws established there in the last few years can be hauled before the court's full-time justice. The court, which meets every Friday afternoon, has prosecuted more than 800 cases so far. It has levied more than $8,000 in air-pollution fines alone.

"Everybody's cooperating, including industry," says Tom Summers, who is director of the Kentucky TB-RD Association and a member of the air pollution control board that help set standards for cleaner air. "The standards we've adopted here are among the highest in the country," he says, "and the court is a natural outgrowth of efforts to enforce these standards."

Local officials in agencies and government are responsible for most of the court cases. One citizen group calls itself "Watchdogs on Environment" and takes offenders to the ecology court. And although there is special provision for small citizen rewards for spotting polluters, few people have tried to collect the rewards.

The court has spurred international publicity and more than 200 towns around the world have already requested detailed information about how it all works. More courts may be in the making soon.

Contributions to Christmas Seals help fight air pollution, emphysema, TB, and smoking. To find out how you can join the fight, contact your local tuberculosis and respiratory disease association. And answer your Christmas Seal letter right away. It's a matter of life and breath.

Q. Dear Dr. Boothe:

Recently I discovered that my husband of 10 years, and the father of 3 sons have been engaged in homosexual activities, with a supposedly good friend of the family. This realization put me into a state of shock so bad that I had to be sedated for days. My husband offered to give me complete custody of everything we worked for. But he maintain the fact that he wanted visitation rights with our sons. He also said that he was sorry to wreck the family scene, but that he was happy that the whole affair was out in the open and for the first time he can live as God intended.

I can't confide in anyone because if news leaked out about this it would ruin his business in the neighborhood. But since my husband's departure I can't stand the sight of him much less trust him in the same house with our sons. Do you think I should allow my husband to try to maintain any relationship with our sons knowing his true identity?

Sincerely
Discovered too late

A. Dear Too Late:

Yes, your husband should be allowed visitation rights to his family, unless a psychiatrist find him to be unfit as a father. Just because you found out about your husband's sexual activities doesn't mean that he is any less of a father than he was before. Your husband may be in need of psychiatric help. My suggestion to you is that you try and help him as much as possible.

Q. Dear Dr. Boothe:

I am a widow in my early 50's. My husband has been deceased for the last 6 years. My children are all grown and have located outside the state. Out of loneliness one day I answered an ad in the lonely hearts column of one of those scandal newspapers.

People interested in becoming foster parents are invited to an informal two-hour evening program to be held in the conference room of Children's Services Division, 351 Columbia boulevard, St. Helens on Tuesday, December 5th at 8:00 p.m. Dr. Lendon Smith will speak on "Loving one more child or teenagers in your home". A coffee hour will follow the program.

preschoolers, half-day enrichment programs, special centers for retarded and disturbed children, and emergency care. Henderson said like all other social programs 4-C has had its growing pains, "but I hate to see this conscientious effort on the part of a few people to destroy a good program."

On October 27, 1972, Mr. Melkiosian, who by his functions, is supposed to represent people of the nation, says in a letter, "We have been advised by the State Approving Agency (authorized by his agency) that there will be no written response to our request for a further investigation of the Schools Building Contractor course."

On October 12, 1972, Senator Vern Cook announces in the Portland Observer that he will initiate action in the next session of the State Legislature to enable the State Board of Education to screen out state correspondence courses.

In September, the International Correspondence Schools president John Walsh replied to Senator Cook's letter of inquiry. "I am aware of Mr. Miller's complaints. Primarily those relating to currentness of our text material." (Now Mr. Walsh ascribes V.A. statements to me) "In the latest complaint to the Veterans Administration he cites three texts: Common Brickwork, Architectural Terra Cotta and Face Brickwork, and their copyrights." Now Mr. Walsh announces the republication of these booklets, coming after my set. I never got a completed set, even with the contract paid off. The reader will note that "Architectural Terra Cotta" is an extinct building system and has been so for a good decade! The cost is about nine dollars per lesson for a little booklet and correction page check-off, paid by student or by government subsidy. My analysis states, "Remember, I.C.S. only processes a fraction of all lessons contracted and paid for. Credit charges $67.00" on Building Contractor."

I.C.S. president Walsh further states, "In that time we have never been accused of fraud because we have maintained high ethical standards in both our educational and business operations."

I submit material for screening by the personnel of the office of Congresswoman Edith Green. Senator Cook suggests possible national legislation. I suggest a congressional investigation lest all correspondence schools think they can get away with anything.
