OBSERVATIONS IN COVERING THE NIGHT-BEAT:

Maury Wills, currently singing and strumming his banjo at the Union Plaza Hotel in Las Vegas, admits that maybe baseball players aren't that popular with the girls as some of the swinging football stars around. "But take jewel thieves," Maury told me, "they're even more popular with foxes than football players. Especially if they share some of their loot with them." Maury said he set a record in 1962 by stealing 104 bases, but it didn't do him any good except in the record books. "You ever try to give a girl a hot base?" Incidentally, with the resignation of Sandy Koufax, Wills has been named to succeed him on the NBC-TV "Game of the Week" sportscast. Maury and I had a toast of Teacher's Scotch to celebrate his new appointment.

Redd Foxx, the lovable old junkman on TV's hit "Sanford & Son," has a prison record. The comic wasn't too foxy at dodging police during his lean years. He did some time in the jails around New York, but he can't remember how much or for what reason. "I don't know, but it was a pretty long line of stuff," he told me. "Three months was the longest I ever did, but I did that two or three times." Those were really lean years, he observed...

Raymond St. Jacques, starring with Freda Payne and Philip Thomas in the Joseph Levine and Brut presentation of "Books of Numbers", is a stickler for authenticity. When St. Jacques, who also produced and directed the movie, was casting the part of a klu klux klan leader for key scenes, he settled on a local resident of the Dallas, Texas location site who was a former and very active member of the KKK...
