Labor pushes affirmative action

Labor Commissioner Bill Stevenson announced the recent appointment of three technical assistance coordinators for the Bureau of Labor's affirmative action program.

Donny Adair, Joyce Colby and Gretchen Kafoury will work with Pat Haggin, program director, in developing a technical assistance program for consumers, employers and employees.

Stevenson said that the program's goal is to help Oregonians understand and comply with civil rights law.

"People don't usually intend to break the law," he said. "In most instances they either don't know the law, or they are using old personnel policies that are out of step with today's legal requirements."

"Last year we processed twice as many complaints. Many of these fell under the injured worker and handicap laws passed by the 1973 legislature," Stevenson said.

Oregon is one of seven states in the nation which has stronger civil rights laws than the U.S. government. As a result, the Bureau of Labor enforces both state and federal anti-discrimination laws.

Workshop studies health bill

A National Health Security Workshop for all persons interested in national health security will be held Saturday, April 10th, at Marshall Union Manor, 2020 N.W. Northrup, Portland.

The workshop, sponsored by the Oregon Coalition for National Health Security, will begin at 9:30 a.m. and conclude in the afternoon. Workshop participants will study details of the National Health Security Act (the Kennedy-Corman Bill - H.R. 21 and S.3), compare other legislative proposals, analyze information about financing national health security, and discuss strategies of the Oregon Coalition for National Health Security and the Health Security Action Councils throughout Oregon.

One of the highlights of the one-day workshop will be the showing of the 21-minute color film "Paid in Full" which is narrated by E.G. Marshall and in which Carroll O'Connor, Carol Channing, Ossie Davis and Ruby Dee appear.

Laine Friedman, executive director of the Oregon Coalition for National Health Security, said that there would also be discussion of the May 6th and 7th hearings in Salem of the Health Care Subcommittee of the U.S. House Ways and Means Committee. Congressman Al Ullman (Democrat - 2nd District - Oregon) is chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee and is expected to be in attendance at the May hearings in Salem.

The Oregon Coalition for National Health Security, Incorporated was formed last fall and has been actively advocating and supporting the concept of national health insurance. It has been generating grass roots support for the Kennedy-Corman Bill and/or its principles.

More information can be obtained by calling the Oregon Coalition office at 224-2836.

Tax help offered

This service is being provided through volunteer income tax assistants who are trained in preparing both Federal and State tax forms. Please call 288-6271 or 288-8187 to make an appointment.

In addition, free assistance is also available at the Albina Branch Library in the more-for-less shopping center, on Thursday evenings from 6:00 to 8:00 p.m. and on Saturday mornings from 10:00 a.m. to 12:00 Noon.

Puppet troupe performs myths

African myths will come alive when tales of Anansi the Spider are performed by a San Francisco puppet troupe at 8:30 p.m. Friday, April 9th, in the Nordic Land Room, basement of Smith Memorial Center at Portland State University. The free, public cabaret program is sponsored by the student Cultural Affairs Board.

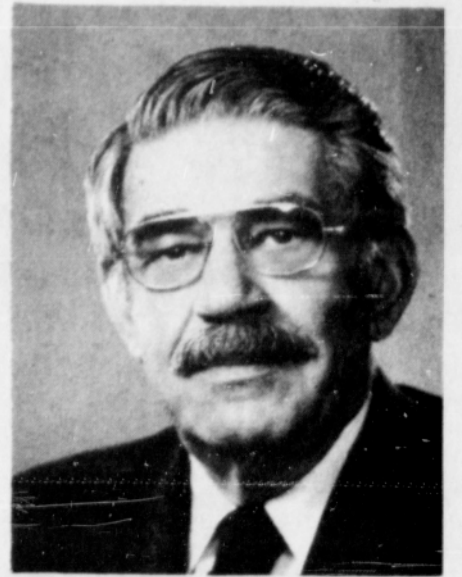

The Morning Glory Theater, a professional puppet troupe which specializes in performing myths, has played throughout the United States.

Anansi the Spider is the creation of puppeteers Bill and Mea Cassidy. The West African children's spider tales are well-known by the people of that region. Bill Cassidy's puppets, made of hand-carved cedar, have been displayed internationally. The songs in the production are West African.

Mea Cassidy learned the art of pantomime in France, where she performed with the French government troupe. Her husband Bill has been a professional puppeteer since 1957. His productions, for children and adults, have been seen on television and in museums throughout the country.

The Cassidys, who have studied with puppeteers from many parts of the world, feel that the "Theater of myth" holds the key to understanding all cultures.
