

Heceta Head Lighthouse makes a picturesque scene. Heceta Head was named for Bruno Heceta, an early Spanish explorer.

the beach. On the bay, the old sections of the city perches next to the docks where the fish boats bring their daily catch.

Crabs can be purchased along the warfs, or there are popular seafood restaurants. The Undersea Garden offers a view of movie life or there is a tour of the "Sara", a historic sailing vessel transformed into a maritime museum.

Overlooking the bay is the Yaquina Bay lighthouse, built in 1871. No longer used, the lighthouse is open for visitors.

Cape Perpetua was named by Captain Cook in 1778, and is now part of the Siuslaw National Forest. A Forest Service Visitor Center offers an introduction to the flora and fauna of the cape. Nature trails lead through the lush "rain forest" and to the drift-wood strewn beaches. Often whales, sea lions and seals can be seen.

Central Coast

Lincoln City is at the heart of the "Twenty Miracle Miles" vacation area. Formed by the consolidation of five towns. Lincoln City hugs the beach for 7½ miles. It is here that many of the large, modern beach resorts are located.

The highway between Lincoln City and Depoe Bay is dotted with State Parks. Beverly Beach offers a view of marine fossils and Boiler Bay is a good place to watch the waves.

Depoe Bay, the smallest harbor in the world, is the home of a large fishing fleet. Short trips to the ocean or longer salmon fishing excursions can be obtained from several dockside charter companies.

The highway bridge at Depoe Bay offers a good view as small fishing vessels make their way in and out through the narrow, rock embraced channel. The fortunate traveller, who arrives on a stormy night, might watch the Coast Guard lifeboat standing by to aid a small boat attempting to cross between the smashing waves.

South of Seaside is Ecola State Park, where a narrow paved road climbs the southern slope of Tillamook Head. Extending along the coast for 6½ miles, Ecola has two sandy beaches as well as hiking trails and picnic facilities. This is one of the favorite places for surfing.

Cannon Beach was named for a cannon that washed ashore in 1846. The cannon can be seen beside Highway 101. Offshore is Haystack Rock, a monolith rising 235 above the ocean waves. Gulls and other sea birds use its rocky cliffs for nests and tidepools at its base are filled with sea anemones, star fish, hermit crabs and other sea life.

In July and August Portland State University presents summer stock theatre and summer classes in Cannon Beach, which is an artists' haven.

Oswald West Park is also a favorite, with a small sheltered beach cove and access to the Pacific Coast Trail.

Tillamook is a typical coast town and offers a tour of the Tillamook County Creamery, a co-operative creamery which makes the famous Tillamook Cheese.

The Oregon Dunes. Between Florence and Coos Bay are forty miles of shifting sand dunes. These unusual dunes are ever shifting eastward, leaving islands of pine and ghost forests in their wake. Cut intermittently by streams and pocketed with fresh water lakes, the dunes are becoming a favorite recreation area. They have recently been designated the Oregon Dunes National Recreation Area.
