

Cathedral Rock is the name given this intriguing rock formation along Oregon State Highway 19 about fifteen miles northwest of Dayville. The John Day River is in the foreground. The Cathedral is part of the famed John Day Fossil Beds. The fluted columns that give it its name vary in color from delicate shades of green and blue to buff and reddish browns. Fossil remains found here are estimated to be more than 30 million years old.

The wheat harvest is in full swing during July and August. The parallel cuts made by a combine add an artistic touch to a wheat field being harvested. This scene is near Moro in Sherman County looking north toward the Columbia River about fifteen miles distant. Wheat is one of the major crops in Oregon along with fruit, nuts and grass seed.

SERIES I

Most questions asked regarding our June statement in the "Observer" were: How do we treat persons afflicted with alcoholism?

We treat alcoholism by the uses of a four phase modality, Phase A through D, along with the Triple R concept (Rights, Respect, and Responsibility).

PHASE A:

When persons come to the EXODUS program as clients they start out in Phase A. After the intake procedure, all of the various crises, provision of emergency and supportive help further diagnosis is recognized, and a certain amount of confidence is developed between the client and the EXODUS program. During this phase the client is prepared to enter Phase B.

PHASE B:

Here the client makes a commitment to adjust his habits one at a time to a more constructive and productive selection through process counseling and other supportive presentations. The Triple R (Rights, Respect and Responsibility) concept is used as a measuring model by which the client can objectively balance and ensure his Rights to his Responsibility through Respect. At present we have no Phase B clients.

PHASE C:

After a client has successfully gone through Phase B he enters Phase C, which is a direct supportive service to help the client when he runs into difficulties regarding job, family or friends.

PHASE D:

Is a forever follow-up service to let the client know that, even though he/she has completed the EXODUS program, if help is ever needed we are here, and no "blame factor" is at stake. This is done through periodic mailings and group activity invitations.

The EXODUS program has been in existence for almost four months. It has gained approximately 110 clients, and has expanded to include a day care facility and a residential center.

Yes, we are effectively treating alcoholism by the hour, by the day, by the month. Our clients appreciate your support, contributions and donations.
