

Lewis and Clark, explorers of the Oregon Country, are shown at Celilo Falls on the Columbia in this mural in the State Capitol rotunda in Salem. Seated at the far right is York, who was a valuable member of the expedition, serving as an interpreter, trader and hunter.

Oregon's Capitol building, built of white Vermont marble and bronze, glistens in the midday sun. Atop the building is the golden statue of the pioneer. The Capitol is located in Salem.

The Canby Ferry approaches its landing on the banks of Oregon's Willamette River. County-operated ferries still transport vehicles across the river at three locations along the scenic waterway's course through the heart of the Willamette Valley.
