frame of the Zapruder film — where this shot clearly occurs — the President's head is unmistakably snapped with considerable energy to his left and rear, as if hit from the right and in front by a marksman standing somewhere on the grassy knoll. This head snap is so obvious on a reasonably good print of the film that its significance was brought to the attention of authorities by numerous citizens who saw it.

While the head snap of the Zapruder film indicated a frontal shot, the official theory report prepared by military doctors in Bethesda, Maryland — after the Parkland surgeons' preliminary examination — concluded the opposite. According to the Bethesda doctors, whose findings were subsequently accepted by both the Parkland doctors and the Warren Commission, Kennedy had been struck by two bullets from behind. Medical experts convened by the House Assassination Committee, in examining the medical evidence contained in the National Archives, had also concluded that it was incompatible with the theory of a frontal wound of entrance.

Since 1964, experts in fact have disagreed about the significance of the head snap and have put forward both ballistic and neuromuscular explanations to reconcile a snap to the rear with the theory of a shot from the rear.

Nonetheless, the fact that the Commission knew of the head snap yet never dealt with it reinforces questions about how open-endedly it pursued the possibility that a second gunman was involved, shooting from a position other than the School Book Depository.

In general, the Warren Commission's evasiveness concerning the case for a gunman on the grassy knoll may well have been counterproductive. Critics immediately asked why many witnesses had never been interviewed who in previous statements had supported the grassy knoll theory. They attacked as misleading an Appendix to the Report which strengthened the case against Oswald by ruling out the possibility of a gunman on the railway bridge, without revealing that most of the witnesses it cited had actually argued in favor of a gunman on the grassy knoll. Allegations of an official cover-up in this area began within months of the publication in September 1964 of the Warren Report. They were strengthened as bootleg prints of the Zapruder film were screened, at first to college audiences but eventually on national television and to Congressmen and their staffs.

Meanwhile over the years assassination researchers listened carefully to private copies of the official tapes of the two Dallas police radio channels during the assassination. It was one of these tapes on which a researcher claimed to have detected as many as seven shots that was forwarded to the House Assassination Committee and its acoustics experts. Although this tape was eventually ruled to have no evidentiary value, the Committee's inquiries to the Dallas police department resulted in the provision of tapes and dictabels of better quality for analysis.

It was from acoustical analysis of this material — analysis using simple and straightforward techniques available in 1963 — that experts now have concluded, with 95 percent probability, that a shot was indeed fired from the grassy knoll.

Acceptance of this analysis may well represent the most powerful impact the science of acoustics has ever had on human history.

(Peter Dale Scott, a professor of English at the University of California-Berkeley, has authored or edited numerous articles and books on covert politics, foreign and domestic, including most recently "The Assassinations: Dallas and Beyond" (Random House, 1976) and "Crime and Cover-up" (Westworks, 1977). He is one of the foremost independent researchers on the history of the Kennedy assassination.)

and mail out refunds in four to five weeks. It can take ten weeks or longer for a return filed in April when the processing workload is much heavier.

Second, taxpayers filing close to the deadline are more apt to make mathematical errors due to lack of time to recheck calculations on their return. Errors slow down processing, delay refunds, and often require correspondence between IRS and the taxpayer.

File Early

Why file early when you've got until April 16 this year to mail your tax return to the IRS? Here are two good reasons:

First, if you're expecting a refund, why wait much longer than necessary to claim and receive it? Normally, few people file early in the year, permitting Internal Revenue Service Centers to process returns
