Above are photographs taken by young people who spent the summer learning photography through the Summer Work Program at the North/Northeast Youth Development Program.

Program goals were: To provide information on job search methods; to give general information on photography; to provide non-traditional opportunities to improve basic skills of reading and communication; to improve learning and work habits; to provide a useful service to the community.

The project instructor was James Hill. The youth program is sponsored by the Albina Women's League.

ted to head administrators at Portland State this year to institute a Masters' program in the department.

"One of our main reasons for asking Dr. Brown to speak at the banquet is a celebration in itself. He is one of several persons that helped establish the black studies department at Portland State. He and other concerned black leaders helped develop insight for growth and expansion of the department. They instituted ideas to help the community with service and research techniques. These services have ranged from counseling, teaching and providing leadership conferences," said Little.

At the banquet the Black studies department plans to honor four outstanding community citizens. Awards will be given to show appreciation for their outstanding contributions to the Black community. Little says two awards will be given for leadership and two in the area of art.

For banquet tickets and reservations contact the Black Studies Center at 229-4003. Tickets are $12.50.
