Ask Aunt Bea

Dear Aunt Bea

I am a first time grandmother and am delighted over it since, out of my two children, a son 27 and a daughter 33, my daughter gave birth to a little girl just 8 months ago, so it's been a long time since I've had to deal with babies and the many situations that occur. My problem is advising my daughter how not to spoil her baby. She stays home with her all day and apparently holds her a lot and picks her up at every little pee she makes, consequently the baby is unhappy with anyone else, but Mommie, even Daddy has a hard time with her.

It's obvious Mommie and baby have become too attached. Aunt Bea, what advice can I give?

Grandma

Dear Grandma,

I can understand your problem and daughter's too, her being a first Mommie too. She, I'm sure, thinks she's giving her baby all the love and attention she needs, however, she must understand that she's doing more harm than good by doing this.

Since you can see it, she must be feeling the impact to, so discuss the matter with her in a friendly, helpful way (not in an interfering manner). Explain the importance of teaching her new baby to be independent, and secure without Mommie's arms around her all the time. She must learn to be comfortable with others too, especially daddy, otherwise, Daddy may not feel wanted by them.

Tell your daughter to let baby cry a little, as long as all is well, it surely won't hurt her. Also try a baby sitter in the home or a neighbor or even a nurse for an hour or two, several times a week, until baby learns the delight of being social and independent. I'm sure all concerned will be a lot happier!

Good Luck!
Aunt Bea

Dear Aunt Bea

I've been married 6 years now and when my husband and I were first married, we discussed everything. We'd sit and talk for hours and I didn't do all the talking. He use to talk to me too, but now instead of discussing anything he tells me to make the decisions or take care of whatever is at hand.

When he comes home from work, he rarely has but a few words to say to me. I, sometimes get the feeling he no longer cares to be part of me, but he has little to say about that too. Please advise.

Jan
N. Portland

Dear Jan,

On the contrary, it seems to me you've taken care of him and all else so well in the past, that your husband probably doesn't feel the need to bother because he knows you'll do just fine.

As far as his not having much to say, men, for some reason, tend to feel that after a few years together, everything has been said and clam up. So it's up to us to remind them of changing times, and feelings and personalities and there is still a need to communicate. So change your time and tone of voice and just maybe, he'll take notice and comment.
