School Board keeps police

Steve Buel, who voted against the suspension, said there is racism in the police bureau and in the schools but the School Board is attempting to deal openly with the problem. "I haven't seen one open admission or open approach to dealing with racism in the police bureau." Stating that the actions of the Board July 2nd when the newly elected Board plans to close Adams High School, will be racist and will set back the Board's progress in dealing with racism, he said, "I am embarrassed to criticize the police when we're going to do the same thing next week."

A summary of CJO activities provided to the Board gives the goals of the program as:

- To develop in young people a positive attitude toward the police.
 - To develop in young people an acceptance of individual responsibility among the police, students, faculty and the community.
- Since October the CJOs have served the 44 schools with 6th through 8th graders (except Boise and Tubman where parents rejected the program). The 14 officers made 2,650 full-length class presentations to 65,125 students. In addition, they participated in various school activities, field trips, and were present in the building and on the grounds. The school program takes 60 percent of their duty time, while 40 percent is spent on regular juvenile duties.
