Carter spreads cheer through gospel sound

by Nathaniel Scott

The Joyful Sound, a 17-member religious group that specializes in religious music with a gospel sound, according to Margret Carter the director, brought seasonal cheer to such people as the inmates in the Rocky Butte County Jail, youths in the Juvenile Detention Home and the senior citizens at the Northwest Tower.

Carter, a native of Shreveport, La., attended Grambling State University in Grambling, La., and after moving to Portland in 1967, received a bachelor's degree from Portland State University. She is currently employed as a counselor advisor at Portland Community College, Sylvania Campus.

The mother of nine children, she is also the director of the Pacific Northwest Crusaders, a 47-member group composed of Blacks, whites and Native Americans.

By no stretch of the imagination is she passive. She is vocal, assertive, and through her roles of mother, counselor and performer, has formed some definite ideas about Blacks and the society that we live in.

"I have a strong sense of social and political conscience and religious convictions," she said.

"I don't think the religious group (Joyful Sound) can maintain itself in the confines of the church."

The group is a capella group and Carter, whose voice ranges from lyric soprano to alto, rearranges the music to fit the timing necessary to sing gospel music to a non-instrumental sound. She said it "... produces a togetherness that transcends color and ethnic origin."

Carter's vocal abilities are not limited to musical renditions, she is also a work-shop facilitator and makes speeches to parent groups.

"The main thrust of my speeches," she said, is giving support to and for women who are in the work force. "My speeches are motivational in nature."

Through her position of counselor and advisor at PCC, Carter said, "I find that Black students are very inconsistent about seeking counseling and guidance." Most students' problems, she said, "are financial."

According to Carter, there is a lack of discipline in our people to educate themselves.

"A lack of educating ourselves to the trends and changes in this society is killing us," she said. "The trend is now in vocational and technical training."

The root of the problem may be varied, Carter said, but the big factor is lack—lack of involvement on the part of the student, parent and school.

Speaking specifically about the public school system, she said, "We need to back to the PTA (Parent-Teacher Association) concept, back to when the school didn't work without the home and the home didn't work without the school."

The Joyful Sound, according to Margret Carter, has upcoming performance dates tentatively scheduled for January 11 at Benson High School and a special concert to be held at Columbia Christian High School, February 6.

The Joyful Sound—a moving experience in musical interpretation—and Margret Carter—a dynamite force that says among other thing that the trends and changes in this society are killing us.
