For those people who would like to own a home but don't know quite how to swing this large investment, Albina Inner City Development Corporation (Aid Corp.) may be able to provide you with some valuable assistance.

involved with the rehabilitation of old structures.

The object of this program is to price the houses in a range cheap enough to where low income people could afford it and to help renters that wanted to become homeowners in the neighborhood.

Equitable Savings and other lending institutions are providing loans at low interest rates to aid the work of Aid Corp. The house pictured is located at 3727 N.E. Rodney. Call 287-0395 for further information.

PSU discuss minority recruiting

Issues surrounding the recruitment and retention of minority students in university programs, particularly in engineering and the sciences, will be discussed during a three-day period at Portland State University, May 17, 18 and 19.

Gladys D. Webster Motley, vice president for student affairs at Cheney State College (Pennsylvania), who developed a nationally recognized model for counseling minority students, will lead the PSU discussions. Her visit to Portland is being sponsored by the University's Affirmative Action Office in collaboration with PSU President Joseph Blumel's Affirmative Action Committee.

Motley will discuss three basic issues at PSU: educational recruitment of minority students; academic retention; and the economic outcomes for graduates.

This will not be Motley's first time on the PSU campus. She was a graduate student here in 1969 while supervising a tutorial program at Portland's Irvington Elementary School. She earned her BA degree from Philander Smith College (Arkansas), and her M.Ed and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Oregon. She was active in counseling and minority student programs in Lane County during the early 1970s.

Attendance at the discussions will be by invitation of the Affirmative Action Office, with the exception of an open session at 2 p.m., Wednesday, May 19, in 296 Smith Memorial Center, to which all interested faculty, students, counselors and the public are invited.
