The Gingerbread Lady

The Gingerbread Lady, by Neil Simon, opens Portland Civic Theatre's Blue Room season and runs Thursdays through Saturdays through November 20th.

First presented in New York in 1970, The Gingerbread Lady is essentially a drama rather than a comedy, but it is humorous to the extent that there is a great deal of funny dialogue stemming very naturally from characters who live in a world where wisecracks serve to mask almost constant cries for help.

In The Gingerbread Lady, Neil Simon has created characters through whom he deals with alcoholism, parent-child relationships, friendship based on mutual weakness and need, and the waste of life itself. In certain respects this play has a Chekhovian quality in that its people are funny at one level, deeply tragic at another. The protagonist, Evy Meara, a burnt-out, alcoholic lounge singer, returns from a spell in a sanitarium where she has gone for treatment for alcoholism, to her rather squalid New York apartment. Evy attempts to put her life together with the help of her daughter Polly and a few friends. The Gingerbread Lady was made into a film last year entitled Only When I Laugh, and earned three Academy Award nominations.

Under the direction of Robert Nielsen, the six member cast includes Betty Brookes as Evy Meara, Adair Chappell as her daughter Polly, Nicholette Reid as Toby Landau, Evy's best friend, and Thom Cosgriff as Jimmy Perry, the homosexual out-of-work actor.

Agatha Christie's The Mousetrap, directed by Jacqueline Willis is currently playing on P.C.T.'s Mainstage through October 30th. Call 226-3048 for reservations.
