Forest jobs available

The Columbia Gorge Ranger District, a management unit of the Mt. Hood National Forest, will have jobs available on the District this summer.

Over thirty temporary positions start in May or June and end in September or October. The pay scale varies from $4.17 to $6.14 per hour depending on the experience of the applicant.

Housing for temporary employees is available on many of the Districts in the Mt. Hood National Forest, but not on the Columbia Gorge District.

Most of the available temporary positions fall into one of these three categories: Timber, Wildland Fire, and Recreation. Timber jobs include work such as tree planting, thinning, cone collection and erosion control. Wildland fire positions call for brush piling, burning, and fire fighting. Recreation jobs include campground maintenance, trail maintenance and construction, trail hosting and public information service.

Applications for next year's summer and seasonal jobs must be post-marked no later than January 15, 1983.

Applicants may submit only one application nationwide to a Forest Service Regional Office or Research Station. To be considered for one of the temporary jobs on our District, they must specify interest in working for the Mt. Hood National Forest on their application. Applicants must also be at least 18 years old at the time they report for duty.

Applications can be obtained from the U.S. Forest Service or call Janet Splawn at (503) 695-2276.

KKK

the 'KKK' was an attempt to cover up the burglary," Fuhrman explained. The house is quite isolated so only a few neighbors know the Whites lived there. Fuhrman said the Police Department has no knowledge of any Klan groups operating in the Salem area.

The Salem Human Relations Commission will hold a public meeting on December 30th at 7:00 p.m. at City Hall to discuss the matter.

In the food stamp line

necessary to go back out to the main office for a "one-on-one interview." Purpose of this first interview is to screen out those who obviously do not qualify. Those who pass are assigned a certification interview, to take place anywhere from several hours to several days later. Proof of income, rent receipts, utility bills were to be brought in for the certification session.

For those toward the end of the line for the one-on-one interview, this second step in the process lasted close to two hours. One worker handled approximately 25 applicants, going through their individual problems, while two other people behind the counter appeared to do nothing at all. One woman sat at a desk and lingered over the morning paper, drinking several cups of a hot beverage. Another referred occasional walk-ins to the right department or form to fill out. She had plenty of time to disappear several times and return with cups of coffee, and chat with others behind the counter.

At one point she began collating forms. When she was asked what they were, she replied that they made up an Aid to Dependent Children (Welfare) application packet. There were 16 distinct forms and instruction sheets, some with multiple copies.

By 9:35 those in line were showing signs of unrest. "They sure run you around here," said one woman. "Yeah," said another, "it's not like this at other offices. Whatever it is here, they run you through all these games." "What are you going to do?" asked the first woman. "You could go," she said. "Yeah," replied the second woman, "that's just what they want you to do. But where else is there to go?"

There was an ongoing commentary on the PA system: "Security—you are notified that a tow truck has been called to the parking area. Security—proceed to the parking area for cover."

Meanwhile, a Native American woman and her daughter had made it to the window. "Spotted Bear?" asked the food stamp worker? "Is that your full last name?" "Yes," said the woman. "And you recently came here from Montana?" asked the worker. "Yes," replied the woman. "Well, we'll have to make a collect call to Montana, you know, to verify this. You've been here two months?" she asked. "Yes," said the woman, who tried to explain her situation. The case worker disappeared, then came back to check her computer. "I just wanted to make sure," she said. "Now, you moved here two months ago from Montana?" "Yes," replied the woman.

A young man was next. He explained his living situation—25, single, and without income, he had been laid off from Kentucky Fried Chicken a while back. He had moved in with his parents, who were both retired and receiving social security. Also living in the house were his sister and a friend, along with a "friend of the family." The case-worker went over and over this, trying to figure out who was getting income, who was contributing to household expenses, and who was cooking and eating together. It turns out that the Social Security was the only income for the entire household. And because he could show no proof of income, and was not applying as head of the household, the young man was turned away.

In the middle of all this, another worker came up and asked the worker doing the interview about the case of "the Smiths' son." Apparently, he was considered a recurring problem. After a five-minute consultation, the second worker concluded with "Let's sic him on SSI" (Supplemental Security Income). The worker doing the interviewing dropped everything and made a call.

As 11 o'clock came and went, and as those near the end of the line reached the front, it appeared that about one in five applicants was sailing through without problems.

Meanwhile, the PA system continued its conversation: "Security, calling Security to the parking area. Cover for tow away. Repeat. Security to the parking area to cover for tow away."
