THE OIL PAINTING of "The Black Christ" photographed above, was done by Henry L. Frison of Portland, an artist who teaches art classes at the Cascade campus of Portland Community College.

Frison, who has been drawing and painting on his own since his early boyhood in Texas and his youth in New Mexico, completed a three-year course in commercial and fine arts at the Advertising Art School here in the city several years ago.

The Frison studio is in his home. He works on his art there after a 9-to-5 job in a local hospital. His murals of African jungles in his basement rooms, his murals of Egyptian temples and life at Portland State University and at the Solid Rock Church of God in Christ show different facets of his talent from the portraits he makes of clients. The commercial aspects of art attract Frison as well. He makes signs and posters for individuals and groups.

As a member of Members' Gallery, Frison will exhibit some of his work at the West Hills Unitarian Fellowship in Southwest Portland beginning April 10.
