

Oppressed people cannot remain oppressed.

"We must recognize that we can't solve our problem now until there is a radical redistribution of economic and political power."

—1967

Here is the true meaning and value of compassion and nonviolence, when they help us see the enemy's point of view, to hear his questions, to know his assessment of ourselves. For from his vision we may indeed see the basic weaknesses of our own condition, and if we are mature, we may learn and grow and profit from the wisdom of the brothers who are called the opposition.

—Martin Luther King, Jr. —1968
