

1st Christian Church sings 23rd Psalm

The 23rd Psalm: Contrasts, is being presented Sunday, June 1st, at 4:00 p.m. by the Sanctuary Choir at First Christian Church, S.W. Park Ave. and Columbia, Portland. There is no charge and child care will be provided.

The 23rd Psalm may be the world's best-known and most-loved poem. Throughout the centuries, it has inspired more composers to set it to music than any other religious text. The First Christian Church choir presents this great psalm in a startling variety of music and text. It will feature Yugoslavian folksong, classic expression, mildly modern dissonance, even rock chant and some surprises. Laurie Pratt, organist and choirmaster, has jokingly described the concert as the "23rd" in 23 contrasting styles.

The Everlasting Baptist Church of Jesus Christ sponsored "Talent in our community churches" to provide canned goods to senior citizens in Portland. Winners were: Mrs. Flowers, soloist; Rev.

Mumford's United Gospel Singers; and, St. Andrews Catholic Church. Over 200 items of food were raised by the event.

NAACP student winners announced

The 1984 Portland Branch N.A.A.C.P. ACT-SO competition was held last week. Students competed in 16 sub-categories of humanities, sciences, performing arts and visual arts. The winners of each category will compete at the national NAACP convention in Kansas City, Kansas.

Kim McCarty, a senior at Benson High School, won the science category with a biology project, "The Effects of the Gamma Radiation Source on Fruit Flies," and the humanities category with an original poem titled, "Jazz". The performing arts category was won by Kenneth Dembo who did an oratory excerpt from James Baldwin's book, "The Fire Next Time," titled "My Dungeon Shook." Kirstan Ray, a senior at Wilson High School, won in visual arts with photography. Holli Trautman will also go to the national convention for her African dance which received the next highest judges' score in performing arts.

Congratulations to all the students that competed and won medals in sub-categories.
