According to Multnomah County Commissioner Gladys McCoy, "Starting July 9th, the Civilian Conservation Corps of the 1930's will be reborn in the Multnomah County Youth Services Demonstration Project."

That's the first day of enrollment for the program, which will employ an estimated 50 eighteen-year olds in such areas as conservation and pollution control while they learn work skills.

McCoy emphasizes that enrollment is limited only by funding and that more young people can be enrolled if further contributions are received. Today, $65,000 has been received from public and private sources including the Jackson Foundation, U.S. Forest Service, Multnomah County, Nerco, Hayden Corporation, Nero and Associates and Norcrest China.

The project has applied for tax exempt status and includes participation by the cities of Portland, Wood Village, Maywood Park, Troutdale, Gresham and Fairview.
