

Delegation urges Dutch to refuse Cruise

A delegation of U.S. theologians and religious leaders will call on the Dutch government this week to refuse deployment of the controversial Cruise missiles because they are a threat to global security and a serious obstacle to resuming arms talks. An urgent, last-hour appeal will be made to the Dutch Ambassador in Washington.

The inter-faith delegation will meet with Ambassador Richard H. Fein at the Dutch Embassy (4200 Linnean Ave., N.W.) at 3 p.m. Wednesday, followed by a 4:30 p.m. news conference by the religious leaders at the Rayburn House Office Building (House Armed Services Committee Hearing Room No. 2118). The news conference convenor will be Rep.

Patricia Schroeder, D.Colo. "Although our delegation represents a wide range of religious beliefs and experience," said Stephen Cary, Philadelphia, "we speak with one voice on this crucial question: We call on the Dutch people and the Dutch government to say 'yes' to the future with peace and security by refusing to accept the Cruise." Cary is chairperson of the American Friends Service Committee.

Other members of the delegation include Dr. Harvy Cox, Cambridge, Mass., Harvard Divinity School; Rev. C.J. Malloy, Jr., Washington, D.C., Executive Secretary, Progressive National Baptist Convention; Rev. Benjamin Alicea, Professor of Church History, Reformed Church in America, and a Dean at the New Brunswick Theological Seminary, New Jersey, and Sister May Lou Konwacki, Erie, Pa., Chairperson of Pax Christi, the Catholic Peace Organization.

The Dutch Parliament is expected to vote sometime in June on whether to accept and deploy 48 Cruise missiles as part of a larger NATO plan to deploy Cruise and Pershing II missiles in Western Europe. The Dutch government is under constant U.S. and NATO pressure to accept the Cruise despite opposition by 63 percent of the Dutch population.

"The Cruise, because of its potential first-strike capabilities, is a threat to peace in Europe," Cary declared. "Holland's refusal to accept the Cruise would not be a sign of anti-Americanism, but rather a sign of common sense and hope. A 'no' to the Cruise in the Netherlands could help break the arms spiral and pave the way for resumption of East-West negotiations in Geneva."

The 63 percent Dutch opposition figure is according to a poll conducted by the Dutch government in February this year. Many members of the Dutch Parliament are opposed to the Cruise, but some Dutch government officials and some Parliament members are worried that rejection of the Cruise will be seen by many as anti-American.

Baptists issue plea for peace

Leaders of the Baptist Convention of Nicaragua have issued a pastoral letter to "our Christian sisters and brothers throughout the world" to stop "the death and destruction plotted against us" by the U.S. administration and its CIA.

"The administration of the richest and most powerful nation ... is blocking, attacking and destroying the life aspirations of our people," the letter says. "In recent weeks, indiscriminate bombings of peaceful villages have increased, with a toll of deaths and casualties which includes tiny children."

The United States has been backing guerillas opposed to the left Sandinista regime.

Northeast Portland

The political leanings of candidates seemed to be a larger factor to contributors in races for state offices in Northeast Portland.

Bill Stevenson received the lion's share of business and professional PAC funds in the Senate District 8 race. Victorious incumbent, Bill McCoy won the support of labor unions and some business interests and third-place finisher Wally Priestley received all of his $1,400 from individuals.

Margaret Carter, the victorious Democratic candidate in Northeast's House District 18, received about half of her $18,159 in contributions up to May 7th, from individuals; PAC and direct corporate contributions made up the remainder. Black Oregonians for Business PAC and the Alliance for Economic Development were Carter's largest direct contributors. Henry Scott's Coast Janitorial contributed office space to the Carter campaign, the value of which probably exceeded any other donations.

Carter's major opponent, incumbent Ed Leek, raised just less than $10,000 in the reporting period and most of it came from labor groups. $2,350 was donated to Leek from business and professional interests and he received loans of $1,000 and $1,100 each from two individuals.
