

Boston Univ. internships

BOSTON — Boston University is currently accepting applications for its Washington Legislative Internship on Community and Polity program, where students work and study in the nation's capitol.

Sponsored by the University's Center for Judaic Studies, the Community and Polity program takes a unique approach to the Washington internship experience. It focuses on how members of a minority group formulate strategies to approach relevant issues, and how they pursue these interests through political and legislative processes. Interns explore the roles that national organizations, voluntary agencies, and special interest groups play in the workings of our democratic system.

The interns' course and field work are well-integrated to provide them with a well-rounded, practical academic experience. During the fall semester, students complete academic preparation at their respective schools. They must complete courses pertinent to an ethnic group as well as from the fields of sociology, political science or economics.

In the spring, interns participate in the everyday operation of a Washington, D.C., office, while taking two seminars. Interns take placements with groups or agencies matching their interests. Almost any ethnic or religious minority advocacy group that is engaged in lobbying activities is appropriate for placement.

Some of the organizations open to internships include the American Jewish Committee, Black Caucus, Hispanic Caucus, Religious Action Center, American Hellenic Education Progressive Association, and many more.

The application process is highly competitive, with only 10-15 positions available. The internship is unpaid, but work-study may be available for qualified students. For work-study information, students should contact the financial aid office at their school.

The year-long program coincides with the academic calendar of Boston University, and interns are charged the same tuition and fees as matriculated Boston University students. The University provides housing in apartments located near the Capitol.

To be eligible, students must have a 3.0 cumulative average, a basic understanding of American politics, some experience in campus or community affairs, well-developed verbal and written skills, and the ability to work independently.

For further information or an application packet, write to Hillel Levine, Boston University, Washington Internship on Community and Polity, 745 Commonwealth Avenue, 6th Floor, Boston, MA 02215, or call 617-353-4428.
