

Seven-year-old Shukree Dawan joined a group of about 20 people in renewing their protest of the returning drug sales activity on the corner of NE Grand and Alberta Saturday afternoon. A statement by the Eliot/King Crime Prevention Committee said, in part, "We are here to justify the namesake of this neighborhood and to testify to the philosophy of a great man. To return respect to a proud and contemporary name—King!"

Black Women's Health Project

The National Black Women's Health Project (BWHP), Portland Chapter, will be holding an induction ceremony Jan. 19 at 5:00 p.m. The ceremony will be held at the Mt. Olivet Baptist Church, 116 N.E. Schuyler. The induction ceremony is a formal recognition and certification of a local chapter of the National BWHP.

The BWHP was initiated in 1980. Through a critical analysis of personal experiences, Black women are beginning to realize that they have some control over factors affecting their physical and mental health, such as diet and lifestyle and approaches to problem solving. In actively seeking out available health resources, in becoming aware of self-help approaches, in establishing a dialogue with health care providers, and most importantly, in establishing dialogues with each other in order to break the barriers of isolation and powerlessness, Black women are beginning to realize how much their own actions can control and affect their lives.

This model of mutual and self-help activism has been successfully used by the Women's Health Movement in its continuing quest to empower women to make health care decisions and increase their awareness of reproductive health issues. It is essential that this course of action be conceived directed, and controlled by Black women in order to reduce the disparities and inequalities of American life.

Persons wishing to become members of the Portland Chapter may do so at the induction ceremony. If you have any further questions, please contact Bobbi L. Gary, at 231-7509 or Karen Wells, at 643-8866; or write to The National Black Women's Health Project, Attention: Bobbi L. Gary, P.O. Box 40590, Portland, OR 97240-0590.
