

FREE JOBS

Volume 2, Number 20, January 29, 1986

Magazine

OREGON AND WASHINGTON

OFFICERS—Irene Cox (left), and Charles Carter and Yvette Morrison, employees with the U.S. Department of Labor's Employment Standards Administration, completed training in wage and hour compliance activities and are now certified to work as wage and hour compliance officers. Their intensive training included an in-depth and technical analysis of the Fair Labor Standards Act, investigative techniques and procedures, and comprehensive study of federal minimum wage and overtime laws. Cox will work in New York City as a compliance officer and Carter and Morrison will work in other wage and hour program areas in Washington, D.C.