The Sound of Music

It's a sunny and mild Saturday afternoon; just the right time and temperature for window shopping. As I stroll through the Lloyd Center, I notice the teenagers, tomorrow's adults, out shopping or congregating, just as you and I used to in days gone by. Quite a few of them are wearing pink, blue and red hair in the wildest styles imaginable. I'm also having trouble distinguishing the males from the females. It's quite a bazaar scene. There is a bench full of senior citizens shaking their heads in disbelief as the younger set parades by them in full regalia. I overhear one of them ask, "Where do they get this from. They look like space creatures!"

I'm at a local teenage disco where tonight they are featuring a popular recording artist. Every time the DJ mentions his name, the kids go into a frenzy. When show time rolls around, the club owner and I are flabbergasted. The lyrics are outrageous, and the kids are singing along word for word. Anytime he gets real funky and says something like "Motha Fu_____", screams and shouts almost bring the roof down. Now I shake my head thinking, "How far will it go?"

It's truly amazing how things come full circle. I have trouble admitting it, but I must be getting old, because now the shoe is on the other foot. I can recall the trouble I had with my parents when I wanted to wear braids in public, but, at least, they did protest and let me know it wasn't right. They also used to visit my room once and sometimes twice a week to listen to music with me and just to talk. I can recall my dad saying, "Go on and listen to that mess, son, but, remember, there's more to life than women and making babies." Of course, I thought my pops was an old "blockhead" and didn't know what was happening, but, alas, I always remembered what he said. Thank God for Parents!

Today in the 80's, things are moving faster and faster. Most of us (adults) have trouble staying on top of our own agendas, let alone our children's. How do I know? I talk to the kids and ask them what their parents think about their hairstyles, dress and music. Most times the answer is, "They don't care."

Just like when we were young, their main influences are the recording artists. We need to all take time and listen to what they listen to and to see what they see. I'm sure that they are a rebellious lot, just as we were, but they listen to what you say, even when you don't see the results right away. Show you care about them so they won't get lost in temporary fantasies and fads. You owe it to them and to yourselves.....Think about it.

Portland NAACP Resumes Meetings

The Portland Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People resumed its regular monthly meetings in September and will meet October 19, at 4:00 p.m., at the Vancouver Avenue First Baptist Church at 3138 North Vancouver Avenue. Host pastor is Reverend O.B. Williams. The Portland Branch NAACP is going into its biennial election process to elect new officers and an Executive Committee. They will elect the nominating committee at the October meeting; receive the nominating committee's report on November 16th, at which time nominations from the floor may be made providing they are signed by three members in good standing. An Election Supervisory Committee will be elected in November. The election of officers will be held in December on the 14th. (This is the second Sunday, rather than the third Sunday when NAACP usually meets. The Branch voted to have the meeting earlier so as not to get into the Christmas rush as such an important election.)

The program Sunday, October 19 will give the community an opportunity to hear the candidates for Labor Commissioner—the incumbent Democrat Mary Wendy Roberts; and the Republican Candidate Dan Goodhall from Salem. The Branch has also asked Gladys McCoy and Glen Otto to meet with them Sunday. They are candidates for Chair of the Multnomah County Board of Commissioners. Questions have been sent to all the candidates. They will respond on Sunday.
