Look into the facts about Measure 14, and find out why...

... people all over Oregon are concerned about '14' — the proposal to shut down the Trojan electric plant.

Because Measure 14 simply makes no sense.

Shutting down Trojan — an operating nuclear power plant which has reliably and economically produced about as much electricity as Bonneville Dam for more than ten years — would provide no real benefits to Oregonians and would lead to negative environmental and economic consequences. A shutdown of Trojan is drastic and unwarranted. It simply makes no sense.

■ I've studied this issue from a scientific standpoint. Measure 14 would be of no benefit to the people of our state. Shutting down a proven operating electric plant is a drastic approach that makes no sense. As a scientist and as a citizen of Oregon, I'm voting NO on Measure 14... and I urge you to vote NO, too. ■

Dr. Mary Felix, Chair
Department of Physics
Pacific University

Because of the impact on Oregon's environment.

Even using conservation, cogeneration and renewable resources, new coal plants would be the backbone of any program to replace Trojan's electricity. And we would face the potential need to dam main stems of Oregon's remaining free-flowing rivers and streams in order to build new hydro-electric plants. As a result, Oregon's environment would suffer significantly.

■ As an Oregonian with a deep commitment to our state's environment, I strongly oppose Measure 14. How will we replace the electric supply which comes from Trojan? Two things are most likely: more dams and more coal use. Measure 14 will be bad for the environment. Please vote NO. ■

Because of the impact on consumers' electric bills.

Shutting down Trojan would increase Oregonians' electric bills because electricity from Trojan is far less expensive (2.9¢ per kilowatt hour) than electricity that would have to be used (which costs up to 7¢ per kilowatt hour) to replace Trojan's electricity. There is no surplus of reliable electricity at Trojan's predictable low cost.

■ Measure 14 would close one of our cheapest sources of electricity. It is estimated that the cost of replacing Trojan's power would be over a billion dollars. We're the one's who will pay every month in our utility bills. Higher utility rates caused by shutting down Trojan will hurt everyone... including those living on fixed incomes. Before you vote, please think about the price tag for all Oregonians, especially those least able to pay. ■

Jean Young
Mayor of King City and Senior Activist

Because of the impact on Oregon's economy.

Shutting down Trojan means the immediate loss of hundreds of jobs, and the state-wide economic impact of the Trojan shutdown would place thousands of more jobs at risk. Closing Trojan at the cost of jobs and higher electric bills would unnecessarily hurt Oregon's economy.

■ We've all worked hard the last few years to rebuild Oregon's economy because we all have a stake in Oregon's economy and its future. Measure 14 isn't a game. If this drastic measure passes, we'll all pay the price. Measure 14 is a step backward that none of us can afford to take. ■
