Tis The Season

The Halloween costumes are barely even off the rack and already merchants are decking the stores with boughs of holly. The political commercials go off and the commercial commercials come on. Buy this and buy that. He or she will love it! Little Jimmy or Marie is making their list and checking it twice and somewhere amongst the mad dash for materialistic glory for a day lies the true spirit of Christmas.

Personally, I love this season. On the last Thursday in November, I get to stuff myself to the gills without having to hear about it (I'm an admitted glutton). During this time of the year, families come together from the four corners of the earth, and, on Dec. 25th, I'll have enough after shave to last another year. (I'm not complaining.) I can become as blitzed as the law doesn't allow on the 31st. But what I like most of all is people start to act like people again.

This is the magic of the season, the true magic. Also, let us not forget the meaning of the whole holiday season: Thanking the Maker for blessing us in ways big and small and for caring enough about human beings to come and walk upon the earth in human form so we could really understand what this madness we call life is all about. So as we slowly submerge ourselves into the seasonal madness, fighting long lines, downtown traffic jams, and fanatic shoppers, let us count our blessings and thank God that we are still among the living.
