Medical Quackery

Medical quackery is misinformation about health. Each year, scores of books and magazine articles claim "breakthroughs" or "miracle cures" in the treatment of chronic medical conditions. Regrettably, the vast majority of these books and magazine articles are unscientifically researched or deceptively reported.

Consumers should bear in mind that many of these products sold by these and other quacks contain toxic substances which pose direct hazards to the user's health. Remember, for medical problems, go to licensed medical practitioners.
