The topic of youth unemployment was one of the many issues covered at the Black Family Reunion Celebration held on June 13th in Atlanta. Charmin, Procter & Gamble's brand of bathroom paper products, distributed free booklets detailing essential steps for youth seeking employment.

Charmin also underwrote a roundtable forum analyzing the issue from the perspective of youth, employers, community leaders and educators. The event, sponsored by the National Council of Negro Women, travels this summer to Los Angeles, Detroit and Washington, D.C.
