New Civil Rights Administrator Named

Raleigh Lewis, former administrator of the Washington State Human Rights Commission, has been named administrator of the Civil Rights Division of the Bureau of Labor and Industries, Commissioner Mary Wendy Roberts announced.

Lewis, 47, was selected from among 120 applicants from throughout the country for the post. The selection process included interviews with finalists by a seven-member citizens' panel appointed by Roberts.

"I am very pleased that Raleigh has accepted the position. His wide background and personal commitment to civil rights will strengthen the Bureau's effort against discrimination," said Roberts.

Lewis' salary is $3,914 a month.

The new administrator served as executive secretary of the Washington Human Rights Commission, which is charged with enforcing the state's anti-discrimination laws, a position he held from 1980 through 1985. Prior to that he was deputy director of the Illinois Department of Commerce and Community Affairs with a staff of 200 and he served as director of the Illinois Office of Manpower and Human Development.

A graduate of Lincoln University of Jefferson City, Mo., Lewis is a candidate for a doctorate in education from the University of Massachusetts. He joins the Bureau after working as a private consultant in Olympia.

The Bureau's Civil Rights Division handles about 1,600 new discrimination complaints annually. Lewis said his major goals include speedy resolution of cases and an education program to make the public more aware of the services offered by the Bureau in handling discrimination complaints in employment, housing and public accommodations.

Lewis and his wife, Donnie, have three children.
