Major Drug Testing Program at Multnomah County Jail

Multnomah County is one of three counties in the nation selected to participate in a new federal program to monitor drug use by people who are arrested.

The U.S. Department of Justice has granted the County $325,000 for the 12-month program which will test all arrestees for drugs on a voluntary basis, according to Gladys McCoy, County Chair. The information from drug testing at the time of arrest will be used to determine sentencing conditions for those who are convicted, she said.

In awarding the grant to Multnomah County Community Corrections, the Justice Department cited "the broad and deep base of community support for your proposal."

The program—officially entitled the Detection and Monitoring of Drug-Abusing Arrestees Program—has support from many local law enforcement agencies, according to Harley Leiber, community corrections director. Supporters include District Attorney Michael Schrunck, Sheriff Fred Pearce, Portland Mayor Bud Clark, district and circuit court judges and the Portland Police.

With the drug use information available, judges will be able to make sentencing decisions which will more likely help convicts and protect the public, said Cary Harkaway, Community Corrections Project Manager who will oversee the program.

Testing, which will take place at the Multnomah County Detention Center downtown, is scheduled to begin in October.

O.D.O.T. Announces Appointment of Two Employees

Gary Potter, a 20-year employee of the Oregon Department of Transportation, has been named assistant director of the department's Administration Branch.

Robert N. Bothman, ODOT director, told the Transportation Commission today that Potter, currently Program Section manager for the Highway Division, will assume his new duties Aug. 1.

Bothman also announced the appointment of Judith Gregory as manager of ODOT's Personnel Services Section.

Potter will oversee ODOT's Personnel Services, Civil Rights, Policy and Planning and Administrative Services sections, in a major realignment of the department's top-level management that eliminates a vacant deputy director position, Bothman said.

Gary Potter

Potter, 42, is a graduate of Pleasant Hill High School and Oregon State University. He began his career as a landscape architect for the State Parks and Recreation Division in 1967.

In 1971, Potter moved to the Highway Division to create a new Environmental Section and was named section manager in 1976. He was responsible for the major environmental activities of the division for such projects as the construction of Interstate 205.

Potter was named head of the Program Section in 1983. He is chiefly responsible for developing the division's Six-Year Highway Improvement Program. Other responsibilities include monitoring the highway construction program, bid openings and contract awards and serving as local government liaison for the division.

Potter also chairs ODOT's Jackson Scholar Committee, through which ODOT employees' personal contributions provide college scholarships to dependents of department employees.

Judith Gregory

Gregory, 45, is currently director of Information and Administrative Services for the Oregon Liquor Control Commission. She will begin her new job Aug. 17, Bothman said.

Gregory will oversee human resource support services for personnel administration, labor relations, employee development and employee health and safety. She replaces Karen Roach, who left ODOT in March to serve as an administrator in the Executive Department.

A graduate of Oregon State University, Gregory was acting personnel director and worked as a personnel analyst for the city of Corvallis prior to moving to her present OLCC job in 1979.
