FOR SAFETY

National Safety In The Workplace Week

Safety? You bet your life! It's a catchy phrase. But it's more than just a slogan for National Safety in the Workplace Week. It's a fact.

All year long workers bet their lives on safety. Every time a machinist steps up to a machine, every time a carpenter picks up a saw, every time a chef fires up the stove, safety is vital.

That's why workplace safety should be an everyday concern for every American worker and employer. It can't take a back seat to productivity or profit. It can't be an afterthought at a board meeting or simply a poster on a bulletin board.

The US Department of Labor's Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA), the American Society of Safety Engineers and the Associated General Contractors are observing National Safety in the Workplace Week to help make everyone aware of the need for strong workplace safety and health programs.

Employers can review company safety and health policies, make self-inspections and provide safety and health training and equipment.

Workers can help too. They must know and comply with safety rules, be alert for hazards and wear required protective equipment.

Is safety worth it? You bet your life.

For more information, write OSHA, Room N3637, Washington, D.C. 20210.
