

It takes more than Bus Drivers to run a Bus Company

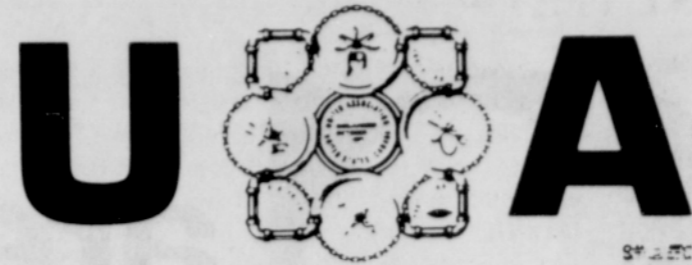

It takes more than drivers to run a bus company. It takes mechanics, secretaries, financial analysts and managers, transit planners, equipment managers, customer relations specialists, service attendants, supervisors, management personnel, marketers and public relations personnel. Literally hundreds of specialists in dozens of fields.

Almost all of the jobs in the transit industry require specialized or technical training. Training that is available in technical and trade schools, community colleges, military schools, and four year college programs.

A career in public transit can be rewarding, satisfying and fun. So, talk to your high school or college counselor today. You may qualify for a career in public transit tomorrow.

METRO ELECTRICAL TRAINING TRUST
 5600 N.E. 42ND Portland, Oregon 97218
 (503) 287-0756

The labor/management committee has resolved to cooperate in public service efforts whose objective shall be to enhance the public image of I.B.E.W./N.E.C.A. and publicize the quality product we market.

Facts and figures define the I.B.E.W. electrician as the best trained, most productive electrical worker in the nation today. Our joint objective is to make use of that skill and promote that talent.

Since the first meeting between Jim Brooks of the Urban League and the Metro Electrical Apprenticeship Committee in 1964, many Blacks, women and other minorities have been recruited and employed in the electrical construction industry. Because of this cooperation, Charlye Molden and Donna Hammond were two of the first Black women in the nation to be trained as journeymen electricians.
