Last week, the opening of the Oregon Convention Center was punctuated by a four-day business fair, as well as Saturday's street dance.

The fair had business people glad at the opportunity to connect with others in related fields, and consumers enjoyed the opportunity to meet the people behind the businesses, as well as sample an array of free products (from ExecuLodge's free champagne to Quik Print's free film processing).

Saturday night, Body & Soul, Nu Shooz, and Tower of Power rocked listeners for the--also no admission--street dance. This event packed in people, and offered an array of food and musical choices. Radio station Z100 broadcasted live from the Oregon Convention Center.

It is estimated that 100,000 people went in and out of the Convention Center doors its opening weekend. Bus lines going to and from the event, as well as the MAX line, were overloaded with people from the Rose City as well as ample tourists in town for the weekend's events: several extra runs were added to help diffray overcrowding on Tri-Met.

The staff at the Observer (we had a booth at the fair, for those who missed it) had a great time, and thanks to all who came and supported us. Good luck to all of our contest participants, and we hope to see you there next year at the Oregon Convention Center's one year anniversary!
