Local Student Named Finalist In IBM/Good Housekeeping "Tell Me A Story. . ." Contest

First-grader Mark Eggleston of Portland, Ore., is one of the top 10 winners in the kindergarten and first-grade category of the IBM/Good Housekeeping "Tell Me A Story. . ." contest, a nationwide competition for family and community stories written by children in grades K-6.

His award-winning story, "The Stolen Christmas Tree," describes his grandfather stealing a Christmas tree as a young boy, his feeling of guilt and his confession many years later.

A student at Terra Linda Elementary School in Beaverton, Ore., Mark is the son of Randal and Victoria Eggleston. As one of the top 10 winners, Mark, his school and his teacher will each receive an IBM Personal System/2 Model 25 computer and an IBM Proprinter II printer.

Sponsored by IBM Educational Systems and Good Housekeeping magazine, the contest drew entries from nearly 30,000 elementary school children nationwide. Judges narrowed the field to 10 students from each of three grade categories: K-1, 2-3 and 4-6.

One grand-prize winners will also tell their stories at the National Storytelling Festival in Jonesborough, Tenn., next October. The festival is sponsored by the National Association for the Preservation and Perpetuation of Storytelling, which has supported the program since 1988.

The contest is the culmination of the IBM/Good Housekeeping "Tell Me A Story. . ." Celebration, a school language arts program that incorporates storytelling and the whole language philosophy of reading and writing.

Whole language acknowledges the natural progression from oral to written language. The "Tell Me A Story. . ." educational kit utilizes storytelling to develop and enhance these language skills.

"IBM shares the view of many teaches that a whole language philosophy encourages creativity in the process," said James E. Dezell Jr., IBM vice president and general manager of IBM Educational Systems. "We hope that this project not only has sparked the imagination and involvement of children across the nation, but also enhanced teachers' efforts to teach essential writing and reading skills."

The comprehensive "Tell Me A Story. . ." educational kits were mailed last October to each of the 73,000 elementary schools across the country, and the contest was announced in the October issue of Good Housekeeping. An estimated three million school children were exposed to the program. A lesson plan led the students through oral and written activities to prepare them to research and write their own folktales based on information they learned from their families and communities. These stories were entered into the national contest.

"This program, now in its second year, creates an enthusiasm among children for chronicling their families' history in the form of an old-fashioned folktale," said John Mack Carter, editor-in-chief of Good Housekeeping. "'Tell Me A Story. . .' provides America's youth with the opportunity to preserve what may otherwise be lost forever."

In old England, the word "child" referred only to a girl.

One-Of-A Kind Program Simplifies Claims

Oregon Employment Division employees have developed a one-of-a-kind computer program to assist in processing filing options for complicated interstate claims. Exploring these options currently can take an experienced employee from 30 to 45 minutes for each claim. The computer program, using a new technology called "Expert Systems," cuts the time to 5 minutes or less for each claim. Expert Systems are specialized, high-level computer programs that evolved from artificial intelligence. Oregon's Expert Systems is being piloted in two Employment Division field offices - Roseburg and Beaverton. The division hopes to apply the program in all field offices in the future. Contact John Young, 378-8232 or Curt Barnes, 373-7594.

Unemployment Insurance Simplification - A special committee of Employment Division employees has found more than 60 ways of improving the processing of unemployment insurance claims. The ideas range from computer improvements to eliminating unnecessary steps. The ideas are in various stages of implementation. Contact Sharon Kidder, 378-3214.
