Victory For Dick Bogle In The Battle Of The Budget

City Commissioner Dick Bogle's victory in the "Battle of the Budget" guarantees that no women and minorities will be laid off in the Bureau of Fire, Rescue and Emergency Services.

"I have never been happier in my seven years on the City Council," Bogle said following the restoration of $2,730,796 - representing 56 sworn positions - to the Fire Bureau.

Bogle has fought since last December to prevent cuts in the Fire Bureau Budget, knowing that under the "last hired, first fired" policy, minority and women firefighters would be among the first to go.

The other members of the City Council, however, voted to eliminate 113 sworn positions, assuring that all three women and seven of the bureau's minority male firefighters would lose their jobs.

Bogle said the original budget cuts "threatened to destroy six years of Affirmative Action efforts that stand as a model for fire bureaus throughout the nation."

The fruits of those efforts were apparent following a competitive examination in September, 1990, he said.

In that exam, women and minorities captured 30 percent of the top 50 spots on the Fire Bureau's hiring list. The same percentage applies to the top 20 positions.

Those who passed the rigorous examination include twelve Blacks, seven Asians, sixteen Hispanics, ten Native Americans and sixteen women.

Bogle said most of the successful women and minority candidates completed the Fire Bureau's Affirmative Action program offered through Portland Community College. The demanding six-month program requires evening and weekend participation in classroom exercises and physical training.

"Many of these people stand a good chance of becoming firefighters," Bogle said. "If funds had not been restored, no one who made the list would have been hired, and all that hard work and dedication would have been wasted."

The Fire Bureau restoration was made possible by an unexpected increase of $4.9 million in the City's 1991-1992 budget. The increase is attributed to several factors, including higher year-end balances due to bureau savings; fee revenues that were higher than anticipated, thanks to a healthy economy, and increases in the assessed values of property within the city.

Money also was allocated for 19 more police officers, and the hiring of 60 youths in a summer jobs program.

Sentry Announces 20 Free Travel Winners

Twenty Sentry Supermarket shoppers will be doing some extra travelling this year as a result of each winning $1,000 worth of free travel credit from Sentry's "BeBop Days" travel drawing.

Customers were able to enter the drawing at each of 67 Sentry Supermarkets during "BeBop Days," a recent '50s-themed promotion. Each store drew one local semi-finalist. Those names were submitted to a final drawing for the 20 grand prizes. The travel credit can be used until December 31, 1991 and is good for transportation and lodging anywhere within the United States. The non-winning semi-finalists will each receive a $10 gift certificate from Sentry Supermarkets.

To celebrate "BeBop Days," employees at many stores dressed in '50s styles, and stores displayed '50s-era memorabilia. The travel drawing added excitement to the promotional event.

Sentry Supermarkets are independently-owned and serve northern California, Oregon and Washington. Sentry Supermarkets advertise collectively and utilize the buying and distribution power of United Grocers, Inc., one of the Northwest's largest wholesale grocery cooperatives.
